The lasting tragedy of this article however, is that myself and family have been hurt by these careless and false accusations. The questionable choice of this "newsworthy" event to grace your front page only served to inflame the emotions of those involved and do damage to innocent people.

Daggett explains article changes

To the Citizens of Cohasset:

I believe the recent events concerning changes to Article V of the April 4, 1987 Town Meeting Warrant, which resulted in reclassification of two town positions, require several apologies. Firstly, the Selectmen should apologize to the Personnel Committee and to the townspeople for not informing them of the changes either prior to or during town meeting. Secondly, I feel I should apologize for not noticing the changes in the warrant to both the townspeople and to my fellow committee members — four astute and dedicated volunteers.

I do not agree with the Selectman who thinks this matter has been blown out of proportion. One of the primary duties of the Personnel Committee is the consideration of reclassifying positions. This process requires hours of research. Therefore, anything which interferes with that process has a major impact.

Nor do I accept the premise that by virtue of their office Selectmen can change an article submitted in proper legal form by another town board.

The process by which these reclassifications occurred was not fair to those departments who have acted according to the town bylaw regarding reclassifications and promotions.

Sincerely,
Janet M. Daggett

As recipient of the Cohasset Mariner Scholarship I'd like to sincerely thank you. I've always wanted to be a journalist. This scholarship will help me to obtain that goal by using it to purchase books next fall at UMass Boston. I consider myself fortunate to have received this scholarship and hope you continue awarding students in financial need who plan a future in communications.

Family story hours at Library

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library invites school-age children and their parents to a Family Story Hour Monday, July 20, at 7:30 p.m. This is the second in a series of five evening programs for family enjoyment.

Ann Parker will be our guest storyteller. Her program will be one of Irish folktales, including "The Wee Red Man" and a little known story entitled "Bottle Hill."

Parker, a former children's librarian at the Boston Public Library, has performed extensively in the Boston area. Most recently, she told stories at the Castle Island Halloween festival. She has also been a guest storyteller at the Boston Globe Book Festival. The program will last about 45 minutes.

$40,000." He emphasized that all the numbers "are rough, ballpark figures."

Deck Point Inc., he explained, is a well-known builder and developer in this state. The company has supervised the construction of elderly housing and municipal buildings throughout Massachusetts.

"My job," Dougenik stated, "is just to see how the town feels about this project. General manager Vilnis Ezerins asked me to look into this."

The project manager said the preliminary proposal includes housing units "more like luxury condos than affordable housing. He is a builder with a lot of credentials. His detail work is exceptional. These buildings will be beautiful."

Current preliminary plans call for eight buildings of eight two-bedroom units.

Dougenik said although the developer considered constructing a light industrial building or warehouse on the property, the timing was right to propose residential units, including the low and moderate income plans. "We've been thinking about this for several months," he stated. "As project coordinator, I've been carrying the ball here and I've looked into various uses for the property."

In their continuing efforts to comply with a state mandate to provide low and moderate income housing, selectmen approved the recommendations made last week by the fair housing committee. The committee suggested that selectmen pursue a state grant to hire a consultant who will assist the town in developing a housing plan.

The committee also suggested that selectmen pursue membership in the Massachusetts Housing Partnership. They suggested that no more town-owned land be sold until it is first considered for use as low or moderate income housing. They noted that the recommendation did not include the Independence building.

Selectman Clifford Mitman said that more information is needed regarding the Mass. Housing Partnership. He agreed that town-owned land should not be sold without first considering its use for housing. Selectmen have maintained that town property should not be sold unless there are compelling reasons to do so, he stated.

The sale of the Independence building to attorney F. Noel Collins is pending, now that the property has been surveyed and the deed is recorded. Selectmen decided last week to follow through with the proposed sale, despite threatened legal action against that move.

Mary Klein, a homeless local woman, warned selectmen two weeks ago, that if that vacant town-owned building is not converted into affordable housing units, she will initiate a class action lawsuit against the town.

Selectmen have vowed to continue with the impending sale.

Harbor Study Committee submits priority list . . .

The committee member told selectmen that to improve communication between the harbormaster and the boaters, a VHF radio is needed in the harbormaster shack. Later in the meeting, Harbormaster Steven Osborne made a $1,200 request for the radio.

After meeting that night with the advisory committee, Executive Secretary Donald Andrew reported that the advisory committee approved the request. The radio should be installed within a week, he said.

In reviewing the committee's list, Pfaffmann noted that the heavy, laborious maintenance of the moorings should be provided by a commercial company. Requiring the harbormaster and his staff to complete the manual labor is not an effective use of his time, he said.

Rental moorings, he noted, are "begging for a can of worms. There are legal ramifications you probably have not considered," he said. The town currently allows "roosters" to stay at a vacant mooring for $15 a night, although Executive Secretary Andrew noted those fees have yet to be collected.

Pfaffmann warned selectmen the time may come when a rooster's boat is damaged at the mooring. "Who's liable?" he asked. "There are legal implications here."

He also noted that it's "ludicrous" for roosters to be allowed within the harbor, when residents who wait years for a mooring, "are put at a great disadvantage and discouraged from using these services."

Although the state has informed Cohasset that dredging is not necessary, Pfaffmann said the support of selectmen and the town is needed to overturn that opinion. Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray is working toward that end, he stated.

Pfaffmann noted that additional mooring spaces in the harbor are needed. Most people on the waiting list remain there for years, he stated. "We should look at other ideas, besides a town marina. A marina in Bailey's Creek would be great. It would provide greater access."

Fisherman Herbert Jason agreed that once it is dredged, Bailey's Creek could provide necessary moorings for the town.

Selectmen James Gallagher and Martha Gjesteby noted that although mooring fees generate substantial income into the town's general fund, there is a need to make the harbor a self-supporting entity.

Committee member Robert Wood explained that almost $35,000 is brought into the town by mooring fees. The harbor budget, minus salaries, is only $7,000 a year. "That $35,000 goes a long way to making this harbor self-supporting," he said.

Selectmen Chairman Rocco Laugelle suggested the committee meet with selectmen to discuss harbor priorities. A special meeting will be scheduled sometime this summer.

Redistricting creates Plymouth County seat

By Paula Lobo
Staff writer

A legislative redistricting plan creating two new seats in Plymouth and Barnstable counties was greeted with approval at a hearing in Plymouth last week. The plan takes effect with the election of 1988.

Members of a special House committee on redistricting told about 50 residents and officials acceptance of the plan has crossed party and district lines. Chairman James Brett of Dorchester was praised for drafting a plan that is fair, if not totally satisfactory.

"We have an awful lot to be thankful for in this plan," said Peter Forman (R-Plymouth).

Forman, who loses Kingston in the new plan, said many observers feared the redistricting would favor Boston but in fact Boston and Cambridge/Somerville lost seats.

The total number of seats remains at 160. The plan is based on the 1985 state census.

This week the plan was overwhelmingly endorsed by the house, and will be sent to the Senate for a vote there while the house considers a Senate redistricting plan.

A new 12th Plymouth County district is created from Kingston, Plympton, Halifax, East Bridgewater and Carver.

The new district cuts across three regional school districts: Silver Lake, East Bridgewater and Plymouth-Carver. Its total population is 34,101.

According to state law, a house district may not contain more than 40,000 residents.

Brett said he tried to avoid disputes by requesting input from localities but added that making the plan fit was like "putting together a jigsaw puzzle."

He said the ideal district should be "compact and contiguous." It should also have "community of interest."

Brett said he tried to avoid splitting any towns not already divided by district.

"I don't like losing Kingston," Forman said, "but there was no legal way to avoid it without splitting Plymouth."

Forman said southeastern Massachusetts will probably gain another seat if the legislature votes next fall to abolish the state census.

If a proposed constitutional amendment to join the other 49 states in basing districts on the federal census succeeds, new districts will be drawn in 1992.

"I hope this is the last redistricting under the state census," Forman said.

Kingston Selectman Joseph Palombo, who attended the hearing, said he has not decided whether to run for the new seat in 1988.

"Right now I'm 50-50," he said.

Palombo, a Democrat, praised the committee saying, "I think they worked hard. It's a good district."

Selectmen promise to end King Street speeding

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

Selectmen promised action to stop speeding trucks from traveling through King Street as a shortcut from Beechwood Street to Rte. 3A.

More than 30 residents attended Monday night's meeting, and asked selectmen to take action against the speeding truck drivers. Dr. William Matteson wrote to selectmen, outlining the numerous near-accidents and actual mishaps that have occurred on the residential street. The problem with the speeding vehicles, he said, is most often caused by out-of-town travellers who are driving to Rte. 3A.

Dr. Matteson suggested that selectmen prohibit trucks from entering the residential street, and that signs be posted at the end of King Street from Rte. 3 A to Beechwood Street.

Town Counsel Richard Henderson warned selectmen that local officials are prohibited from erecting traffic signs along a state highway. Local officials do have the authority to post traffic warnings along town-owned roads. He said he would review the types of vehicles that can be legally excluded from traversing town roads.

Dr. Matteson also suggested that a police cruiser be assigned for a limited amount of time each day to King Street to observe and stop speeding drivers. Selectmen agreed that could be arranged.

Lee Cisneros of King Street suggested that selectmen make the street one-way which would reduce the amount of transient traffic. He also expressed a common concern among his neighbors that traffic will increase with the opening of the super Stop and Shop across from the King Street entrance onto Rte. 3A.

Ken Ingebar of 245 Beechwood Street reminded selectmen that the Beechwood and King Street intersection is treacherous and also deserves attention. Since the state painted yellow directional arrows at that intersection, it has become more difficult to travel through that corner. He suggested the town create a T-intersection there, with stop signs posted at the corners.

Andrea Merrill of King Street agreed with her neighbor, and said serious accidents could result if a driver attempted to follow the yellow directional arrows on that road.

Nancy Garrison of King Street suggested that 30 m.p.h. signs be posted along the road and that signs be erected on King street, alerting drivers of the dangerous intersection at King and Beechwood streets.

Selectmen assured the neighbors they would ask the police chief and safety officer to review the comments and recommend signs for the area.

In other business Monday night, selectmen agreed to name the park located at the corner of Ripley Road and Depot Court, "Constitution Park."

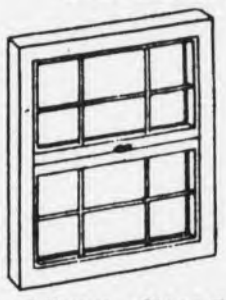
The Cohasset Constitutional Bicentennial Committee made the suggestion, noting that it would commemorate the bicentennial celebration of the U.S. Constitution.

"We feel that the naming of this municipal park in honor of our Constitution and the placing of an appropriate marker thereon is a fitting way of commemorating the founding of our republic 200 years ago, and will serve as a permanent reminder to Cohasset citizens of the esteem in which we hold its national constitution," chairman David Wadsworth wrote in a letter to selectmen.

Selectmen chairman Rocco Laugelle supported the idea, noting that it was a fitting title for the unnamed piece of town land. But he wondered how the previous owners, the Cohasset Improvement Association which deeded the property to the town, would react.

Selectman Burt Pratt assured Laugelle there would be no adverse reaction since all members of the association are now deceased.

The park is more than 16,000 square feet of land which was deeded to the town in 1935 by the improvement association. Previously, it had been the site of the Caleb F.B. Tilden livery stables. Those buildings were razed by the improvement association prior to the conveyance of the land to the town. The parcel was conveyed, Wadsworth noted in his letter, for use of the public as a public park or town common.



Selectmen approved the naming of the town park. There will be a dedication ceremony Thursday, Sept. 17 at 8:30 a.m. in which the DAR flag and the Constitutional Bicentennial flags will be raised. There will also be a band concert that day at the town common.

Team teaching approved for seventh grade . . .

Hart said he feels the team teaching approach will offer the seventh grade a greater identity within the school, because it will have its own set of teachers and the curriculum will be adapted to respond more to the needs of the students.

During the first four periods of the 7-period school day, classes of students will study the four major electives: the teaching team, composed of one math teacher, one science teacher, one social studies teacher and one english teacher. A special needs teacher also will be available.

Under the program, of the remaining three periods, one half of a period will be devoted to reading classes and other electives, such as foreign language, band and home economics . Study periods will be eliminated for a majority of the students.

"This program will not only address the academic needs of the students, " Hart said, "but obviously their social and psychological needs as well."

Ken Cisneros, the science teacher who will make up part of the teaching team noted this is not the first time team teaching will have been implemented in Cohasset.

"We had team teaching in Cohasset in 1976," he said. "At that time, the junior high school and senior high school were separated. There's always been trouble with the seventh grade; they have to grow up pretty darn quick...

"And we'll get to do a lot of the things we couldn't do," he said. "Now, happily, we will have the time. Besides the academic aspect of team teaching, the students will get to see their teachers in a different light, sort of like a coach. We're trying to have the system fit the kid, rather than having the kid fit the system."

On the school committee, both Nancy Sandell and Barbara Bliss heartily supported the measure. They were involved in studying such a program in the Weymouth school system, a program they said has been effective for more than 10 years.

"We're very excited to support the teachers on this program," Sandell said. "I think one good feature of the team teaching program is that it will help the teachers organize themselves and bring out the best in themselves.

"Because of the dedication of the teachers involved," she added, "we should have high expectations."

In other business, the school committee approved a leadership training seminar for department heads and principals.

Dr. Roger Peck of the Harvard College Principal's Center will help those in management positions deal with evaluations of self and staff, interpersonal relations and definition of their leadership skills and philosophies, as well as setting goals and objectives.

"It's important for people to look at their positions in a fresh manner," Hart commented. "It's easy to get tied down in the day-to-day situation. They have to step back from their routine and institution, step back for a fresh perspective."

In support of the three-day program, which will run Aug. 31 through Sept. 2, Chairman Joseph Nedrow commented, "I'm always amazed at how much the private sector spends on programs like this. These are tools to help people work more effectively."

The school committee also voted:

- to approve non-resident tuition rate of $3,250 for the 1987-1988 school year;
- to appoint Patricia Brown as Metco coordinator;
- to appoint Scott Newkirk as a social studies teacher at the junior/senior high school;
- to accept the resignation of Ethel Gormley, school nurse at Joseph Osgood School;
- to accept the resignation of Sarah Nicotra, part-time speech therapist at Joseph Osgood School;
- to accept a six percent salary increase for non-union personnel;
- to request selectmen to declare three school buses and one station wagon as surplus property.

with her sisters. She surely will be the only American in her class.

"And at 5'5"," Nothnagle noted, "Melissa is the tallest person around."

Such a trait may come in handy, as the men there are "very rude," she said. "They come up to her and say 'I love you.'"

Her height also might help her on the local basketball circuit, if she can wake up by tip off time. Games usually begin about 6 a.m., before it gets too hot.

"Although Melissa's new family does not have a phone," Nothnagle said, "letters take only a week to get here. That makes her (Cohasset) mom feel good."

For some reason, letters take longer to reach Cohasset from Saipan, from where 11th grader Kim Dwyer recently wrote her folks.

Despite the postal service on the small south pacific island, Leo Dwyer said his daughter "loves it" there.

"It has the whitest sand, clearest water and cleanest beaches anywhere," he reported.

Kim was greeted at the airport by her host family; her new mother, father, sister and two brothers honored her arrival by putting rings of flowers in her hair, Dwyer said.

Since there, Kim has met the governor of Saipan, has been a guest of the Rotary Club there, and has served as a bridesmaid for a niece of her new family.

"While she misses her family (here)," he added, "she says she feels herself growing. We're very happy for her."

Jennifer Martin was greeted by her new family on the isle of Crete with a big birthday bash, celebrating both her 17th year and her arrival to Greece, according to her mother, Carol.

Jennifer had to learn one custom certainly foreign to Cohasset residents in the summertime - "You are not allowed to go barefoot in the house," her (Cohasset) mother said. "I'm not sure why, but apparently many Europeans are careful about dirty floors. It's just a cultural difference."

While she may not be baring her sole to the Greeks, "it sounds like she's having a wonderful time," Martin said. "She told us of one meal at which she ate lemon soup; it sounded delicious."

Andrew Rossi is also in Greece. "When he was in Athens," his mother, Jo-Ann said, "he went to the Acropolis; he said it was magnificent.

"He left on a bus that broke down for about three hours; the Greek passengers didn't seem to mind it," she noted. Andrew was on his way to a small village in the Peloponnisians, before going with his host family to the Ionian Coast, where they spend the summer.

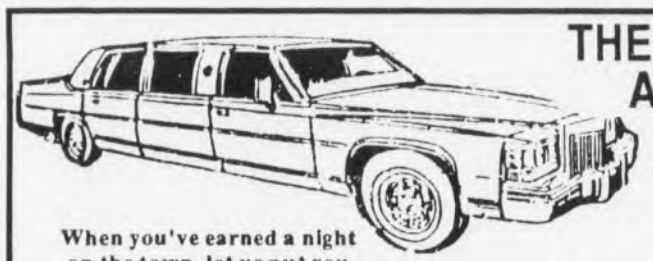
"When we asked him what he was doing," she commented, "he said he was doing what you do every day in Greece - visiting, meeting in the village center.

"They're wonderful people," she added, "he's very fond of them."

Had this been pickle season, Andrew might have been helping his host father and three brothers in their pickle factory...

"Andrew is getting used to the food," his mother said. While he's almost surely eating pickles she added, "He said he's never eaten so much bread in his life."

Margo Nedrow is spending her school vacation in school.



Along with her two new sisters, the Cohasset senior is attending classes in her hometown of Curitida, Brazil, where she is the only American student.

"When she first arrived," said her father, Joseph, "the family had a dinner party and invited the grandparents, aunts and uncles to meet their exchange student. They were all speaking Portuguese and she couldn't understand a word they said."

Margo practiced speaking Portuguese before her trip and since down there, her host mother has been trying hard to communicate with her, he said. By the end of her visit, she hopes to speak Portuguese.

No matter what languages they return with, Cohasset's AFS travelers will have fascinating stories to tell us when they return.

Along with those mentioned here: Cindy Dormer traveled to Portugal; Mary Beth McNamara went to Belgium; Scott Caristo journeyed to Switzerland; Laurel Collins travelled to Malaysia and Heather St. Onge is in Finland. In the fall, Kim Hunt will spend a post-graduate year in Turkey.

Police, fire renovations could cost $1 million

Plans for the $1 million police and fire station renovation project which have been revised six times by the architect, received mixed reviews from selectmen Monday night.

Board members will review the plans along with other town boards who must issue permits and approval, before they decide whether to recommend the plan to the town. Town meeting must make the final approval and appropriate the money for the project.

The police and fire station study committee plans to present the project to the special town meeting this fall.

The project began 15 months ago when an architect was selected after interviews with 11 candidates. During this time, committee members solicited the fire and police departments for their comments and concerns regarding prioritized needs.

The plan presented to selectmen Monday night was the result of six revisions by architect Joseph Putnam. It is his estimate that the current project will cost about $1 million.

After the presentation by the architect, Selectman Burt Pratt expressed his disfavor. "It is too elaborate and too expensive. The town of Cohasset can't afford this." Regarding a statement by the committee that if the building is not renovated, an estimated $360,000 in maintenance improvements will be necessary, Pratt added, "$360,000 in repairs to a 20-year old building is absolutely ridiculous. The advisory committee has to begin to set aside maintenance budgets, so we won't get into this kind of a mess again.

"It would be foolhardy to take this plan to town meeting. You'd lose," he stated.

Selectmen suggested that before they vote on the plan, study committee members should take it to the required town boards for their approval. They also supported suggestion by capital budget committee chairman Ned Tebbetts.

Tebbetts previously commented that in order to avoid the opposition that had been voiced by town hall employees about the proposed floor plan of that project, the study committee should receive a written statement from the fire and police employees, stating they are satisfied with this plan.

Architect Putnam explained to selectmen that because the building is used around-the-clock and has not undergone a program of continual maintenance, there are extensive repairs needed. That list includes replacement of the roof, the heating system and making the structure energy efficient.

Throughout the revision of the architect's plans, Putnam said he was warned by committee members to keep the costs down. The police station portion of the building will change minimally, he said, with the exception of a toilet and locker area for female officers.

Committee members noted that if female toilet and sleeping areas are not provided within the police department, the one female officer could file a grievance. The same procedure could be followed once a female firefighter is hired in that department.

The major change to the fire department is the addition of a garage bay in the rear of the building for additional apparatus. The chief has proposed that even with the arrival of a new fourth pumper, the department should keep the remaining three. The proposed building would also include a second-floor dormitory, large enough to accomodate seven firefighters.

A six-by-six-foot vestibule will be built in the front of the fire department offices. The new facade of the building, according to the architect, will fit in with the neighborhood and provide energy conservation for the interior of the building.

Capital budget committee member Richard Avery questioned whether the renovations will include energy upgrades, and asked for the total cost savings. The architect explained that the heating system is giving out now, and that it will be updated to comply with state code. The cost savings have not been computed, he said, although there will be a payback with the energy improvements.

Diane Sullivan, a member of the renovation committee, noted that everyone now agrees that an annual maintenance and capital improvement budget for all town-owned buildings should be established. She added that if this building is not renovated, there are still extensive repairs that must be completed.

Capital budget chairman Tebbetts warned that despite the need, without the elimination or delay of other proposed town projects, the town will not be able to afford this plan.

"This is a priority," Sullivan answered, "because this building is in such deplorable condition. We're prepared to go forward to the next special town meeting and have it voted. If it does not go forwared, we will have to spend about $400,00 in repairs. It makes good economic sense to do this at this time."

Selectmen then requested more time to review the plans before making their recommendation.

Pioneer Heritage sermon July 19

Speaking at the 9 a.m. family worship hour of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Hingham Sunday, July 19 will be: Bro. Don Magnum and two of his sons, Mark and Don. Their subject will be: "Our Pioneer Heritage."

July 24, Brigham Young and a small band of pioneers entered the Salt Lake valley which was then part of the Great American Desert, and Young proclaimed, "This is the place." Today Mormons in Utah recognize July 24 with big parades and give thanks to the thousands of pioneers who tracked over 1200 miles in search of religious freedom.

Bro. Magnum and his family have recently moved to the South Shore area from Salt Lake City where he served as a stake president of the Church.

Town takes 'Roosters' to court

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

The town took seven fishermen to court Wednesday, July 15 to prevent them from working out of Cohasset Harbor.

According to town counsel Richard Henderson, the town is taking action against Tom Lagrotteria, Michael Ward, Dana Waitkus, Dale Sylvia, Richard Barrow, Richard Morse and John Barret, saying that they can no longer use Cohasset harbor.

Janiak explained that through depositions Ritter made in court and from other evidence including official documents and sworn testimony, he attempted to prove that,"the harbor is run in an unfair, discriminatory and arbitrary way."

Janiak added he had obtained evidence for the trial that proves, "moorings exist without permits and that there are moorings that are not being used."

Janiak believed his clients are "being singled out." "We are basically just saying right now, leave everything alone until the case can be tried on its own merits."

"The harbor is run in an unfair, discriminatory and arbitrary way."
—Atty. Chester Janiak

"We don't want them out forever," said Henderson, "just until they get a proper mooring."

Litigation is now pending on what Harbormaster Harry Ritter refers to as "roosters".

"Roosters" according to Ritter are boats that are owned by residents that have not been assigned a mooring. "Roosters" come into the harbor and use vacant or unofficial moorings without permission on a regular basis.

The case which was heard by Judge Mulkern of Norfolk District Court in Dedham has been taken under advisement.

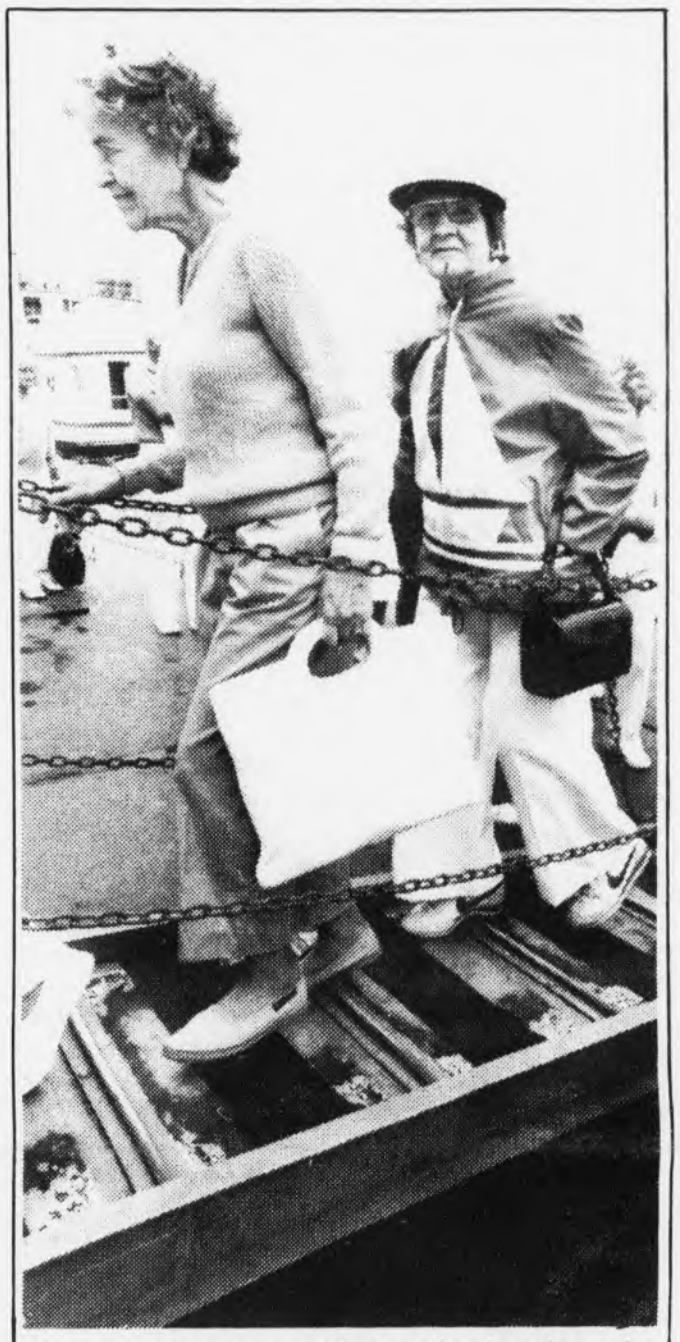
"We don't know when to expect a ruling," said attorney Chester A. Janiak who is defending Lagrotteria, Waitkus,Morse and Barret.

"We presented the Judge with a large number of affidavits," said Janiak, "at this point we are in the preliminary stages."

Janiak explained that he expects that the judge won't take any immediate action against the defendants because, "it is always relevant in the preliminary stages to see if any people will suffer harm. The economic losses for my clients will always be relevant," added Janiak, "Nothing will happen to the harbor, this practice has been going on for quite some time."

"The problem has been occurring on and off for about a year now, " said Ritter who declined to comment on the case while it is still in litigation.

Harbor Committee Chairman John Pfaffman is one resident whose nane is among a 300-name waiting list for a mooring in Cohasset.



"What Harry has done is to ostrasize people in Cohasset without a mooring. Harry has decided that no resident shall enter the harbor unless he has a mooring," said Pfaffman.

"His way of dealing with the situation is not even-handed, it's capricious. In the meantime while residents with boats are not allowed in the harbor visitors are allowed to spend a night or two for free," added Pfaffman.

Pfaffman who opposes the term "roosters", explained that it is not just the commercial fishermen who operate in the harbor without moorings; there are many other people that use mornings on a temporary basis.

"The Harbor Committee is not involved in the litigation," says Pfaffman.

Meanwhile the fate of seven of Cohasset's Commercial fishermen remains in the courts.

Dogs & drinking are headaches for beach guards

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

Sandy Beach has long been known as a mecca for mothers and their children, swimmers who enjoy its relative calm, chilly waters, and teens who gather there during the day and night to drink.

Although startled when he first began duty this summer at the beach, aquatic director Bob Symonds said he has resigned himself to the fact that underaged youths drink on the beach. They are not unruly, he notes, and the only problems he encounters is the litter left by some of the younger beer-guzzlers.

"The older kids and the adults will have a few beers and dispose of the bottles or cans in the trash barrels. It's mostly the younger kids who come and drink at the beach, who leave the containers all over. That's my biggest worry here," he says.

Sandy Beach is a privately-owned area where drinking is allowed, but not condoned. Because the police have limited jurisdiction over the waters and sand along that stretch of Atlantic Avenue beach, they do not actively enforce the drinking law there. They do, however, patrol the parking lot. Underaged drinking is not allowed there and offenders will be prosecuted by Cohasset police.

"Technically, drinking is not allowed at the beach," Sandy Beach Association president David Chittim says.

Center's changes include director

While jackhammers thunder and backhoes carve out a new foundation, there are also interior alterations going on at the community center.

Construction laborers are busily at work at the center, rushing to complete massive renovations to the North Main Street building in time for fall classes. At the same time, there are more subtle changes taking place before the new semester begins.

Eloise Welz is one of those changes. "Weezie" has been named teacher/director of the community center nursery school. A graduate of Wheelock College, Welz brings with her a degree in early childhood education, years of teaching and volunteer experience, and an abundance of enthusiasm.

Classes at the community center for three and four year-olds will begin September 21. Although the construction work at the rear of the building appears monstrous in size and far from completion, contractors have assured Welz and community center program director Judy Volungis that all is on schedule.

Sixty children will be accepted into the two separate programs. Although the classrooms will be larger, Welz is insistant that the student/teacher ratio remain constant and small. The staff members, Welz explains proudly, are highly qualified professionals. Not minimizing their ability to handle all situations, Welz says it is imperative that classes remain small.

"For the three-year class, we will not go above 13 children and two teachers," she explains. "There will be a maximum of 18 students and two teachers in the four-year-old program. I feel strongly that in order to keep our high standards, we have to keep the classes small."

Goedecke named chairman

Jane Goedecke was elected chairman of the advisory committee last week. She replaces Fred Koed, who declined reappointment.

In committee business last week, members approved several departmental requests, leaving the fiscal 1987 reserve fund $1000 in the hole. The committee approved a $6,016 request for legal fees. Labor counsel Robert Garrett received $5,000 for extra work he has completed on the firefighters' contract which has yet to be settled. The remaining $1,000 will have to be authorized at the special fall town meeting.

The committee reactivated the fiscal year 1988 reserve fund, approving a $1,200 request to purchase a VHF radio for the harbormaster's shack. They also approved $1,475 for maintenance of the Central Cemetery. That amount was inadvertently omitted from the tree and park department's annual budget.

Bowen files complaint

A King Street woman has charged selectmen rejected her appointment to the fire department because she was a woman. Selectmen in turn notified the state that Barbara Bowen perjured herself the three times she applied for the position.

Bowen filed a complaint with the Massaachusetts Commission Against Discrimination (MCAD), stating she was denied the position of firefighter/EMT because of her sex. Bowen said she was more highly qualified than the two candidates who were appointed "and I was not considered because I am female."

Executive Secretary Donald Andrew answered the complaint by noting that Bowen was not eligible for appointment at any time since she applied in 1984, because she was "not within the age group (under 32) to qualify for appointment and there were legitimate reasons for not appointing her each of the three times."

Andrew explained on April 21, 1987, Bowen was among four candidates interviewed for a vacancy in the department. She was asked to present a valid driver's license, a requirement of the job and the same procedure which was followed during the recent appointment to the police department. Her license indicated "a problem with the information which was forwarded to the Division of Personnel Administration."

According to Andrew's reply to MCAD, the license said Bowen's birthdate was June 11, 1950 "not June 11, 1956 as other documents she submitted had stated."

Days prior to the last appointment, the fire chief was informed by the Division of Personnel Administration that Bowen's name was removed from the certification list because she had falsified her birthdate on the application for the firefighter's examination on November 23, 1985. She was therefore not appointed to the fire department in favor of William Sestito.

In the complaint filed with MCAD, Bowen said she was denied appointment three times by selectmen. Each time she had a better or equivalent test score as the successful candidate, she stated.

But in answer to the complaint, Andrew said Bowen was not appointed in 1984 because it was learned she did not have her EMT certification, a requirement of the position. Peter Trask, who had the same score as Bowen on the exam, was appointed to the position.

In October, 1985, she was placed back on the eligibility list and was EMT certified. She was tied for first place with Thomas Hernan. But because Hernan had 11 months of experience as a temporary firefighter/EMT he was appointed to the permanent position in October of that year.

Andrew noted that the temporary appointment was made while Bowen was still uncertified as an EMT.

And although she had a 100 percent score on the exam, she was passed over for appointment in April, 1987 because selectmen found out prior to the appointment she had presented the wrong birthdate on her examination application. Because she was over the 32 years age limit, Andrew said she was actually ineigible for any of the three appointments.

Town hall debris to dump?

The architect for the town hall renovation project has requested that all debris from the demolition work be disposed of at the town landfill.

Architect Brett Donham has asked Health Agent Joseph Godzik permission to dispose of the construction debris into the town dump. He also requested that there be a waiver of the fee. "This will help considerably in keeping costs within the budget," he wrote.

Construction at town hall is expected to continue from October, 1987 to August, 1988. "I estimate that over that period of time apporoximately 250 cubic yards of construction debris will be generated," he stated.

Teacher attends conference

Betsy Walsh Connolly, a teacher in the Cohasset Public Schools recently participated in a two-day conference on improving textbooks.

The conference, part of a project funded by the U.S. Department of Education, examined twelve leading science and social studies textbooks to determine how well they meet the needs of students with varying abilities and skills, including mainstreamed or special needs students.

Selected as an outstanding teacher who uses one of the textbooks, Connolly joined 40 other teachers from ten states to determine recommendations for improving textbooks. EDC will present the final recommendations to educational publishers at a conference to be held in January 1988.

Statements denied

Statements attributed to contractor Paul Laugelle in the July 9 Cohasset Mariner concerning property previously owned by Bernard Hamill at 24 Bates Lane have been denied by Laugelle. The statements were published following a July 7 Conservation Commission meeting which Laugelle attended.

Dogs and drinking cause biggest headaches at beach

"But we haven't made an issue about it. There is a sign prohibiting glass on the beach. But it's a social thing. It's a hard thing to take a position on - we tend not to make an issue about someone wanting to bring a moderate amount of alcohol to the beach. We hope to draw the line on someone consuming a large amount, but it's a very difficult thing to enforce."

Drinking on public property anywhere in town is illegal, according to Police Chief Joseph Kealey. Police do not patrol the beach, but rather respond to a call for assistance from the lifeguards, he explained.

"Technically, no one should be allowed to drink on the beach. That's against the town bylaw," he explains. "But we can't expect the lifeguards to be police officers. If they have a problem with someone and have asked them to stop and they refuse, they call us and we send down a cruiser."

The chief has asked the lifeguards each year to control the drinking at Sandy Beach "to the best of their ability," he says. Most people are discreet about it, but if there's a problem, we'll send along a cruiser, the chief adds.

Symonds says this is something that's been "going on for years. My only concern is that these kids are going home after they've been here drinking. I don't know whose problem it is then."

The "regulars" on the beach - mothers with their children, adults and children who make the trip to the beach daily - are no problem for Symonds and his lifeguard staff. "They're very nice people here. They throw away their garbage into the trash barrels. It's just the young teenagers we usually have to clean up after," he says.

The beach association has employed three teenaged boys to clean the beach and the parking lot for three hours each morning. Chittim agrees that this year the beach is cleaner than before, because of the extra crews.

Symonds said the crews dispose of the beach and parking lot trash inside the receptacles lined along the parking lot. Each day, the barrels are three-quarters filled and have to be emptied into the dumpster near the beach house. That dumpster, Symonds says, is overflowing nearly twice a week, until it is emptied. The town employs a contractor to empty the dumpster twice a week.

"Just look inside the dumpster and you can easily see," Symonds says, holding the lid open, "that fifty percent of the litter on this beach is drinking materials." By Saturday morning, there are empty beer cases piled neatly aside the barrels awaiting pickup by the cleaning crews.

The police chief acknowledges that kids congregate nightly at the beach parking lot. The area is limited to Cohasset residents and police cruisers regularly scan the area until the 11 p.m. closing time. If anyone is seen drinking from an open alcohol beverage container, they are brought into the station by police.

If the drinking on Sandy Beach is a nuisance for the lifeguard, his biggest headache are the dogs who are attracted to the sand, water and food along the beach.

"I call the dog officer quite a bit," he laughs, noting that his only arguments have been with owners who insist their leashed dogs remain on the beach. "You are not allowed to have dogs on the beach. It's not fair to everyone else. We get piles everywhere and have to clean up after the dogs. They don't belong here. If an unleashed dog is roaming along the beach, I call the dog officer.

"We have a new system this year where I will jot down the dog's tag number, the time and date he was seen roaming along the beach. I give it to the dog officer and he will mail the fine to the owner," he explains.

Another concern for the beach director is the broken glass strewn over the beach. Although he says the glass is not more excessive here than at any other beach, the cleanup crews spend a lot of time searching for glass that has been buried by blowing sand. At least once a day, someone receives a minor cut from stepping on the sharp-edged glass in the sand.

Vandalism has been kept at a minimum this year, Symonds says. Pranksters will attempt a few tricks each summer, but they are better left ignored, he says.

There are six lifeguards employed by the beach association. Four of those certified guards are on duty from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. each weekday and five are assigned to the weekends. There is one guard who is assigned to a 1:30 to 7 p.m. weekday shift.

It is an easy beach to patrol, Symonds explains, noting that it is a straight stretch of sand and water, with no sudden drop-offs or large ocean waves. It is a popular beach for families. But Symonds warns parents to always watch their children. He also notes that those popular arm floats warn by children should not be used at the beach. "They just provide floatation for the child's arms. They can just as easily drown with their arms out of the water," he explains.

The Cohasset police, Symonds and Chittim agree, have been cooperative in responding to their calls for assistance. "If I have any problems down here, which usually occur on the weekends, I call the police and they are down in a minute," the director states. "I can't say enough for them. They always come by and ask if they should tag cars in the parking lot without a sticker.

Constitutional Committee news

This year marks the Bicentennial of our nation's Constitution, which was drafted and signed at the Philadelphia Constitutional Convention of 1787.

The 200th anniversary of the nation's founding document is being observed nationwide, and Cohasset is an officially participating community in Bicentennial observances.

The National Commission on the Bicentennial of the United States Constitution, headed by the distinguished retired Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court Warren E. Burger, has designated Cohasset as one of the many officially recognized Bicentennial Communities active in all parts of the nation. The town's own appointed Bicentennial Committee is seeking to assist and encourage Cohasset's citizens in local observances of the Bicentennial, and is planning community events as parts of this important occasion.

Thursday, September 17, 1987, marks the 200th anniversary of the signing in Philadelphia of the newly framed Constitutional document by delegates from 12 of the original 13 states. The Congress of the United States has proclaimed September 17 as Constitution Day throughout the country. Though not an official holiday, Constitution Day will be the occasion for special events honoring the birthday of our national Constitution.

As part of the celebration of Constitution Day Thursday, September 17, the Cohasset Constitutional Bicentennial Committee is asking the town's homeowners and businesses to display the national flag on that day as part of our community's participation in nationwide observances. Storefronts and other places of business also would be appropriate locations for displays of bunting, and the Committee would like to suggest that, where possible, the display of bunting would be an appropriate and attractive way of participating actively in the Constitutional Bicentennial celebration.

Our nation's Constitution is the cornerstone of our freedoms, and the Cohasset Bicentennial Committee urges all citizens to honor its 200th anniversary this year.

For the Committee,
David Wadsworth, Chairman

Art Center classes begin Aug.3

Enroll in a South Shore Art Center summer course and enjoy the surroundings of the Center's new spacious classrooms.

The second session of classes begins August 3 in the new building at 119 Ripley Road in Cohasset. Advanced registration is required for all courses and workshops at the Center.

Virginia Avery will teach Outdoor Watercolor on Wednesday and Friday starting August 5 from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Individual attention will be geared to a student's abilities and desire to progress. The watercolor course is a series of lessons in helping students to better develop needed painting skills.

An Outdoor Drawing and Painting course will be taught by Rosalind Farbush on Tuesday and Thursday from 9:30 a.m. to noon starting August 4. This course is an intensive study of form using pencil and paint. Students will explore different techniques of creative texture and various methods of paint handling, color and values.

For children three workshops of Painting and Drawing from Nature will meet in Cohasset, Hingham and Scituate. The Cohasset workshop will meet daily August 10 through August 14 from 3:30 to 5 p.m. and will be taught by Gil Coyle. Liz Wyman will teach in Hingham daily from August 17 through August 21 from 3:30 to 5 p.m. In Scituate the workshop taught by Serena Brundige will run daily August 24 through August 28 from 3:30 to 5 p.m. In Hingham the workshop meets at the Community Center and in Scituate, at the First Trinitarian Congregational Church. Art and Nature is the theme for these workshops with the students concentrating on drawing, painting and mixed media projects.

Ann Murphy will conduct a workshop for adults, Painting Sand and Sea, August 17, 19 and 21 from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. This workshop is for those who have basic drawing and painting skills and would like to focus on the water. Oils, acrylic, watercolor or pastels may be used.

Clement Micarelli will lead a 2-day Figure Drawing workshop August 10 and 11 from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Students may use their own choice of medium—charcoal, paint, pencil or pastel. Micarelli will emphasize proper proportions, gesture in short poses and use of light and shade on longer posed.

Photographer John Droege will lead a Photo Field Trip on Saturday, July 18 and July 25. This is for photographers who have basic skills. On July 18 students will go on location for shooting photographs and the July 25 session will be a critique session.

A Framing and Matting Workshop led by Joni Jensen will meet on August 3 and 4 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Jensen will cover exercises in measuring and fitting, museum mounting, pricing, shortcuts and sources of supplies. Students will work on at least one project to be completed during the workshop.

Take advantage of these summer courses and workshops to discover hidden talents and to become introduced to the South Shore Art Center as it embarks on a new era in its new home at 119 Ripley Road.

For registration and information, call the Center at 383-9548. The Center is supported in part by a grant from the Mass. Council on the Arts and Humanities, a state agency.

New school director for CCC . . .

The director continues, "It looks as though this will be a transitional year. With a new building and a new director, I think it will be a very exciting year. But I will also want to maintain a lot of the same - the same teachers and the same program."

Welz's experience includes three years as a teacher at the community center nursery school. After that, she was a teacher for two years at the Carriage House Nursery School, under the direction of Sally Atkinson. She is a former third grade teacher in Portland, Me. and has been involved in the pre-school story hours at the Paul Pratt Library. As teacher/director, Welz will teach the four year-old class Monday, Wednesday and Friday and leave Tuesdays and Thursdays to her administrative duties.

Welz is anxious for parents of perspective students to meet herself and her staff members. "You know, years ago, people thought of nursery school teachers as glorified babysitters. No more. These are all educated professions who understand how important those first three years in a child's life are. There is credence in our skills," she says.

The three-year-old classroom will be taught by Jean Britte, Ann Madden, Judy Ritts and Jane Bishop. Ritts is a new member of the September staff. The four year-old-classroom will be supervised by Ritts and Welz in the morning, and Welz and Bishop in the afternoon.

"I think it sets the tone of what I hope the Cohasset Community Center with its new building and highly-qualified staff will be," she states. "Selecting a nursery school these days is an important decision for parents. They must make a highly intelligent decision, often by visiting the centers and schools and meeting with the staff.

"I feel strongly," she adds, "that the community center is an important community resource that meets the needs of many ages and needs within this town. The nursery school is an integral part of that, by identifying

Local artist features furniture at Cards & Shards

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

She ravages antique stores and yard sales, looking for the perfect piece. And when South Shore artist Jeanne Morse finds her treasure, it usually ends up for sale at Cards and Shards.

Her artwork is among the more popular items within the South Main Street store. Owner Sue Straley, an avid admirer of Morse and a collector of sorts, said customers come into the store and inquire about new pieces of the pastel-painted furniture.

"And when she brings in her new things," Straley noted, "it's a little bit like Christmas here. I adore her work. I live with it here in the store for a while and I begin to love them. Sometimes when Jeanne brings something in, it goes directly into my house. My bedroom is filled with her work."

The store owner, who is sponsoring a day of art with Morse and artist Lisa Bemis on Saturday, Aug. 29, said that everything made by Morse "eventually sells. Whether it's here for a few hours or a year, someone will eventually come into this store and will fall in love with something Jeanne has done. And they're not just local people. My customers bring in guests just to see her work. It's so much fun when people walk in here to buy a card and when they leave my husband (Dick) and I have to help them carry out a piece of furniture painted by Jeanne."

Morse recalled it took "a lot of nerve" for her to travel to the Cards and Shards shop one December day four years ago. She brought along one or two of her furniture pieces. Straley admitted, "It was Christmas time and we were out straight. But I took one look at her work and I said we'd take some small things right then, and she could bring her larger pieces in the very next day."

Prior to that time, Morse had only sold a few pieces of her work and had concentrated on marine and floral paintings.

The mother of five grown children, she could not begin a commercial career in painting until her children were out from under her paint brushes and canvasses. "I guess I got started when a friend suggested I do a marine painting for her. She wanted a huge painting for her front porch. I did it and everyone seemed to like it," she said. "I started to paint flowers on old furniture I had found, and I brought to a craft fair. I sold everything by two in the afternoon.It took a couple of months after that to get up the nerve to come over to the Cohasset store with my work."

Morse's artwork consists of finding interesting pieces of wooden furniture. "If I feel I can make it beautiful, then I'll take it," she said. Morse then sands the finish off the piece and begins a bottom layer of pastel paint which will be topped by a floral design in the colors of her choice. The artist admitted that if she is feeling "winter" those are the colors she will use in her work. The design and shades of paint will differ with every piece and every mood she is feeling at that particular time.

"I like character and old, interesting shapes in the furniture I paint," Morse explained. "the design comes from my head. I look at things, sometimes for quite a while. It's a creative process that can't be rushed."

Morse explained that she tends to stick with "her colors" which are spring - soft pastels of lavender, pink and yellow. "If I'm doing, blue, they'll be more subdued. But there are times when I can get pretty wild."

Even those items, Straley commented, are popular among her customers and often sell quickly.

Morse noted that her work would clash in many other stores in the area. Straley agreed that their pretty, homey-type shop is the perfect setting for the artwork. The painted bureaus, vanities, mirrors and desks are highlighted among the shelves of cards, stationery, special clothing items and home decorations.

"We have used a lot of her furniture within the store for displays of our other items," Straley explained, noting that a large counter built when The Witches of Eastwick was filmed at the store, has been painted with a huge floral bouquet by the artist.

Many customers bring in special furniture pieces for the artist to paint. "I don't like to be restricted by the design. But the customer can always suggest colors to match whatever room the furniture will be in," Morse said. "One lady had me do an entire bedroom set. She brought it in one piece at a time."

Straley said the arrangement is completed entirely through the store owners and the customers. The artist is told what colors would be most appropriate for the piece of furniture and the piece is delivered from the Straleys to the artist's home. The work is brought back to the store when it is finished and the customer will pick it up there.

"Sometimes," Straley said, "the customer is not quite sure about the piece. Sometimes, you have to live with it for a while. They take that first look, and may just say, 'that's nice'. Then they come back to the store in a year or two, and they'll go on and on about how perfect the piece is in their bedroom. They always love it."

The artist admitted she receives her inspiration "from who knows what." But she quckly added, " it's always a joy and a great pleasure when you do something that pleases someone else. Usually, my customers are pleased."

Straley added, "she won't let it go unless she is thoroughly pleased."

She recalled one fanatic Morse collector. It was a woman who toured New England villages every Tuesday. One day, her limousine stopped in front of the Card and Shards and the elderly Rhode Island woman stepped into the store. "She had gone by our window, saw Jeanne's furniture and told the chauffeur to stop. We filled her car with everything we could fit in. She has bought enough furniture to fill the bedrooms of each of her grandchildren. Every one of her grandchildren has their own room, I guess."

The August 29 Day of Art will be held at the Cards and Shards store in Cohasset Village. The two artists will be demonstrating their work and techniques to the public. Times of the event will be announced.

and meeting the needs of the pre-schooler."

And because it is a community center, she adds, this nursery school embraces all children from all communities and income levels. The diversity of the children who attend the school adds to the quality of the program, she notes.

A nursery school, according to its director, should be a happy, safe environment where the child can continue to grow socially and emotionally. The philosophy of the program will not change with directors, Welz says, "It will only become better. Because we have more space now, we can concentrate on more gross motor activities such as trampoline-type toys, balancing apparatus, and the use of wagons, scooters and wheeled vehicles."

Welz also encourages the staff to work with music and dance. "We didn't have a lot of space before for this. So I expect now we will have a lot of music and dance," she adds.

The hours of the school are from 9 to 11:30 five mornings a week. The separate afternoon session runs from 12:30 to 3 p.m. Welz cautions parents, particularly parents who are sending their first child to nursery school, that there is a waiting list. That is the situation at most nursery schools, she explains. Welz suggests that parents visit the nursery schools before placing the child's name for enrollment.

"I wish the school could accept everyone who wanted to attend," Welz says, "but we have to limit the class size. Word of mouth has spread through the years and parents know what a good school this is. We're pleased about that, but unfortunately our good reputation may force some parents to look elsewhere."

Nursery school, she admits, has become almost a pre-requisite for admittance into kindergarten. Osgood School Principal Jack Creamer told Welz that 98 percent of the kindergarten students have had at least one year of pre-school experience.

"Nursery school is an opportunity for expression that no parent could offer on a continuing basis at home," she says. "The curriculum is designed for a certain age level and ability and we gear it especially to each child's developmental level. That is unique to nursery schools here."

Welz urges parents to visit the various schools before making a final decision. Meeting the staff and observing the classroom is a positive step in deciding which program is best for the individual child.

This year Welz would like to offer parent workshops and seminars either at morning coffees or during the evenings so both parents could attend. It may be a lecture one time, she says, or a question and answer period with a professional such as a child psychologist. Welz is also considering informal talk sessions for the parents, in which common child-rearing problems and solutions can be discussed among themselves.

"Parenting is difficult," she emphasizes. "And parents need some reassuring. It's important at this level to understand that because their confidence is a little shaky at this early stage."

Welz explains that with the expansion and improvement of the community center, the nursery school "is entering a new and exciting era. This is an exciting time for children, parents and myself to be involved with this school."

David Wadsworth, curator of the Cohasset Historical Society, brings a bit of nautical history in his capable hands outside the Maritime Museum. The wooden model made by Capt. Daniel Lincoln, can be viewed at the Elm Street building Tuesday through Sunday from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. (Alan Chapman photo)

☐ John T. Maloney II, son of Dr. and Mrs. John Maloney, is presently leading a group of high school students on a five week tour of Europe for the Browne-Ladd Company. The group will be touring the major historical sites in England, France, Holland, Germany, Austria, Switzerland and Italy. Jack, a 1987 graduate of Dartmouth College, will enter the highly selected management training program of E & J Gallo Winery Company. He will report to the company's training facilities in Los Angeles during the month of August. That means only one thing . . . John and Rose will surely have an excuse for a California vacation!!

☐ Adelle and Dutchie Lawrence have special company this summer, their grandson David Lawrence. David is visiting them from Golden Colorado. David's brother Peter just completed a 403 mile bike over the Rocky Mountains, covering five mountain passes (the highest being 11,900 feet). It took him 6 days. Louise and Clyde Baker of Spring Street spent 10 days in Colorodo with the Lawrences. They were there when Peter began his bike ride. Clyde and Louise saw a great deal of Colorado, with Clyde finding he was much happier at 7,000 feet than be on those high passes!

☐ Chip Anderson will be traveling to Colorado at the end of the month to spend a week in Colorado with the Lawrences, then he will travel with Paul, Joan and Peter Lawrence to Texas to spend time there with Joan's sister Bonnie Ritter and her family.

☐ Congratulations to James and Kathleeen Cannata, who became parents of a baby girl on July 7.

☐ The Robbins family is a busy one, they are planning a wedding next year! June will be the month that June Robbins marries Richard Lippard. Seems like yesterday that June graduated from CHS, we wish you all the luck in the world.

We received this note from David Wadsworth, curator of the Historical Society:

☐ Last Saturday afternoon a visitor walked in to the Maritime Museum and inquired if the Historical Society had any post cards showing a picture of the Capt. John Wilson Historical House, the Society's 1810 Sea Captain's home located at Cohasset Center. The Capt. John Wilson House had figured prominently as part of the background scenery for the filming of Warner Bros. "The Witches of Eastwick" and had been used as part of the action during scenes of Jack Nicholson filmed at the village. Saturday's visitor to the Maritime Museum explained his reason for wanting a picture of the Capt. Wilson House in this way: recently he and his wife had seen a movie filmed in Cohasset, and had seen the Historical Society's old house in the movie.

His wife liked the design of the Wilson House so much that they decided to design their new home, which they are about to build, as a replica of the front of the Capt. Wilson House. Originally they had intended to build a regular "Colonial" style house, but when his wife saw the unusual design of the Wilson House (it has four windows across the front of the house rather than the usual five windows of standard Colonial or Federal design), she "fell in love" with the appearance of the Wilson House, and decided to copy it for their new home. The Society's Curator, on duty at the Maritime Museum, was able to locate a post card showing the Capt. Wilson House. The happy visitor took the card, and departed without leaving name or address. It could well be that, somewhere, before long, a house resembling the old Sea Captain's home will be seen. The Capt. Wilson House itself was built by housewright David Nichols and in 1810 sold for $475.00.

Be sure to remember all of your news, and to let us know about it!

Senior Center news

The Cohasset Senior Center, located in the Community Center, 3 North Main Street, provides a variety of opportunities to help enable residents over 60 in the Cohasset Community area to remain independent.

Open from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday, the Center offers many opportunities for volunteering, participating in recreation, sharing skills, developing new interests, serving others, developing new friendships and using leadership skills; opportunities to give, share and help others in the community.

The Multi-purpose Senior Center is a community facility in which older people may come together to fulfill many of their social, physical and intellectual needs. It can help expand their interest, tap their potential and develop their talents.

The center is also a bridge — a broad, two-way bridge linking the loose-knit senior community to the community at large. The center is a bridge which offers people the opportunity to create a special community of their own.

The Senior Center is not only for older people. Volunteers of all ages and interests interrelate in many types of programs. The young, the old and middleaged teach each other and learn from each other. In turn, they discover that they indeed share mutual interests and concerns.

In the process the individual may soon use the same bridge to become an integral part of the community and to be of service to the community as well.

If you would like more information on our programs or are interested in becoming a volunteer with the Senior Center please call Kathy Bryanton at 383-9112.

SENIOR SHUTTLE VAN SERVICE — Transportation for Cohasset senior residents to medical appointments, shopping, hair care or to visit a friend is a top priority for the Cohasset Senior Shuttle van. There have been many questions as to who can use the senior shuttle. Anyone over 60 years of age or older who lives in Cohasset.

The senior shuttle is available to pick up people at their homes and bring them to the center for programs, down town to shop or go to the doctors. Please let us know when you need transportation for in-town medical appointments and we will make every effort to provide that transportation. Remember, if your medical appointments are out-of-town we can hook you up with FISH — through the use of one of their volunteers.

Daily shuttle schedule: Monday thru Fridays, 9:30 - 12 noon, and 12:30 p.m. to 3:00 p.m.

Special trips scheduled for July:

July 22 Caldor's Norwell, July 29 Caldor's Norwell, Wednesday afternoons Hull Band Concert, 2:00 to 4:00 p.m.

HEALTH CLINIC — Reminder from Mary Anne —There will be two Health Clinics in July; one will be held at 11:30 a.m. on July 22 in the Senior Center, and the second will be held at 60 Elm Street on July 31 at 10 a.m.

WALK WITH FRIENDS — People 50 years and older led by Jane Tilden, Ann Leonard, Shirley Laidlaw, & Lillian Lincoln are on the move in Cohasset.

Each week Tuesday - Fridays walking club members ranging in age from 55 to 84 meet and participate in tours throughout the countryside. "Getting together with friends, meeting new people, and walking to new places is really a lot of fun and doesn't cost a cent," said Jane Tilden.

"Keep Moving," a fitness campaign initiated by the Executive Office of Elder Affairs, (E.O.E.A.) has coordinated a statewide network of walking clubs. It is designed to promote fitness as a lifestyle for people over 50 years old; to educate older people in physical activities within the realm of their capabilities; to motivate individuals to accept responsibility for their health and to maintain a maximum level of physical ability and independence; to provide a productive social atmosphere for older adults; and to lay to rest this country's stereotype of older people as being both frail and helpless.

Kick-off for the Governor's Cup in September 1987 - a five mile masters road race and a one-mile walk — Massachusetts' Keep Moving program has been an extraordinary success. And Keep Moving Walking Clubs have been a key ingredient.

Dr. Richard Lewis and Dr. Lisa Lewis
Pain is important to your well-being. It is nature's early warning signal. A message relayed through your nervous system that tells you when something is wrong. As such, pain is merely a symptom and not the cause of most health problems. Therefore, the sensible approach to health is not to merely turn off the pain (or treat the symptom). But rather fo find the causes and correct them.

We all feel the loss

This has been written too late. It's too late for Jack Langmaid to read, and too late for us to tell him how much he meant to this town.

For nine years, Jack was more than active as a member of the school committee. He was motivated and determined. Despite his physical problems, illnesses which he once told us were "too many to talk about," Jack scoured libraries and books for research. He always had support for his statements; facts to back up his arguments.

And Jack was argumentative. Not for the mere sake of an argument, but Jack loved a debate. At school committee meetings, he was clearly not on anyone's side but the truth. He was not shy about his convictions, and never backed away from telling the truth. It may have bruised a few egos, or tested the friendships of some associates, but that was not his main concern.

Jack was primarily concerned with the children of Cohasset. He desperately wanted to maintain a school system of the highest quality. He was not particularly fond of the politics that were involved in that pursuit, but to Jack it was the necessary means to an end.

He was not subtle. If Jack was not fond of a particular textbook, teaching style or administrative mandate, he would not hide his opposition. He could get downright upset and rather than turn cartwheels not to alienate the person he was addressing, Jack would simply state his feelings. There was no candy coating, no beating around the bush for Jack. He came out with his statement, usually supported by facts and figures, and then just as abruptly completed his dissertation.

He was not long winded. Simple and succinct. There were no underlying motivations behind Jack's statements. Just pure philosophy, facts and finesse.

We missed Jack from the moment he left the board a year ago. His only desire was to serve the needs of our students, and he accomplished that goal many times.

We wish his family happiness for the future. If there is any comfort in death, it is the memory of the brief but important time we had to share. This community suffered a loss when Jack retired from the school committee. We are hurting once again.

We wrote this too late, but with much sincerity. As one Mariner staffer said this week, "Jack was a classy guy." We couldn't agree more.

Summer Theater

The Young People's Summer Theatre will leap into the forefront of the South Shore cultural scene with its production Aug. 6, 7 and 8 of Stephen Sondheim's "Merrily We Roll Along."

The musical is considered a daring choice for the summer theater because it was one of Sondheim's biggest flops. It folded after only 16 performances on Broadway. The theater group's Director Donald Capen said the play was chosen to see if can work under different circumstances.

He noted that the original director Harold Prince, felt the play failed because it never had a pre-Broadway, out-of-town tryout and that its cast was inexperienced.

The summer theatre's production has a cast of about 55, ranging in age from 13 to 22.

Capen said performing in the musical is a good opportunity for aspiring actors. "The music is very complex, even for Sondheim. The story is told backwards, so the staging is difficult. Ironically, the sets and costumes are simple, but I feel that this is an advantage for the audience. They'll be forced to listen to the intricate book and lyrics, and won't be distracted by any razzle dazzle.

QUALITY AUDITING CAC MARK OF INTEGRITY

NEWS ITEM — South Look: What about pit bulls? Recent media coverage on pit bull attacks sparks wide concern. Some town selectmen ask code enforcement officers to appraise local scene. MSPCA calls 99 out of 100, 'nice doggies.' 'There are some bad people who want bad dogs. When you don't control the people, you don't control the dogs.' 'Macho-image' seekers often incite the pit bull's inbred aggressive nature

"...A lot of the problems were with the pit bull owners, so we rounded some of THEM up, instead..."

Prop. 2 ½ was best for communities

Letters

To the editor:

It has been stated that "time heals all wounds" yet, I still find it difficult to believe that with all the heated confrontations surrounding the Proposition 2 1/2 proposal a number of years ago, that the recent move by the legislature to lower the requirements for overriding 2 1/2 could pass so quietly almost without a shot being fired.

Those of us who can be called veterans of that first war remember quite vividly the arguments by the opponents of 2 1/2, how unfair it was, the way it would take away the power of home rule, and limit the ability of government to govern properly. They talked of economic ruination, communities that would find themselves in impossible situations, large numbers of lay-offs of city workers, bankruptcy, - all those types of scary stories, none of which ever materialized.

Way back in those days, almost a two-thirds majority of voters of this Commonwealth said "we have had enough, no more taxation no more "tax-a-chusetts" and with that resounding vote, Proposition 2 1/2 became a reality.

After the vote, there was nary a sound from legislators who had screamed about the problems 2 1/2 would bring; what they did say was "the voters have spoken therefore let it be." Well 2 1/2 became a reality and while there were some difficult times and there were some tough decisions made in many communities, we now stand as a state that our governor points to as the model for all states to be compared to. Economically we are the healthiest in the nation. From the standpoint of new business, wages, unemployment, and all the other economic indexes, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts stands alone.

While indeed there were lay-offs, they were not massive, and in most cases, most of the people were brought back at a later time. Our services were not cut back and while our city and town governments were forced to make some hard decisions, those decisions turned out to be the best for the community.

Government no longer had that ace in the hole they could always depend upon, especially to cover a bad decision - higher taxes. A community has to approve, by two-thirds vote, an override of 2 1/2.

This new proposal will require a simple majority vote

Iran-Contra Countdown

I sit, waiting for the splash—but he, like the sea, gulps the tide, and wallows in the froth of the undercurrent.
He cracks a gap-toothed grin and pants with his sad eyes, like a puppy on a leash waiting for the order.
Run! Run! Carry the flag like a bone to your master!

Casey can no longer speak;
the soldier stands
like a puppet in a band, points his finger at his dead friend and the other men.
Poor hollow patriot, all whittled out and shredded!
His tin medals jingle:
Where's the drum?
Where are the symbols?

I sit,
waiting for the splash
and scribbling on my pad;
my poem
trickles
in dark blurs—
moans down,
down to Nicaragua.

Maria, age seven, drags her brother by the wrist—sniffs the stagnant ashes for some scraps, or bits of garbage—like a kitten stalking a bird.
Poor deserted scavengers, all sticky with cuts and gashes!
Is their mother dead? Is their father fighting a war he never wanted—fighting against the Contras?

And still, the soldier shreds and shreds, waves his striped banner in the air, and listens for loose cannons on the gundeck he has left.
His slick voice cracks, and spins and spins—
what he did, he did for the President, but—
"the President didn't know," they said, and neither did the other men.

Do you feel it, reader,
the boot in the face?
Look in the glass!
Now, what do we do?
Send guns, send money,
or—this time—men?
Perhaps, instead,
send a ball of fire, to shower down in one bright tidal flower?

I sit
waiting for the splash
and scribbling
on my pad;
sobs
in dark blobs—
groans down,
down to Nicaragua.

Font of information about Jerusalem Rd. bees

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

There are 60,000 Italian Honey Bees working very hard to produce their product on Jerusalem Road this summer and Beekeepers Peter Mallou and Harry Judd couldn't be happier.

"They are facinating just to watch," says Mallou, "When you try to explain to people what they do they think that you are crazy."

Mallou and Judd have been keeping bees in their back yard for five years. This is the first year in the new Cohasset location and the bees seem to love it.

"The bees love the sea lavender and the marsh is full of it," says Mallou. The amount of honey that can be extracted from the honey combs that the bees construct inside the drawer like homes that our beekeeping duo have built can amount up to 100 pounds of honey.

Mallou and Judd explain that the life of the average bee is short but extremely productive. "Each bee lives for about six weeks," says Mallou. During that time they perform duties such as scouting out the location of prime flowers.

"The scout bees actually do a dance to signal the other bees as to the whereabouts of the pollen source."

Other bees have jobs such as guarding the hive from nosy insects or cleaning the hive. The most important job for the bees is the foraging of pollen from flowers that is later turned into honey. Honey is collected and stored during the spring and summer months so that the bees have an andance to live off in the winter months when they are in hibernation.

"We leave the bees plenty of honey, we have to make sure that they have enough for their winter," says Judd.

"Oh yeah we've been bitten plenty of times," admitted Mallou,"You have to respect the bees, they are not a toy."

On Thursday the beekeepers put on a small demonstration for members of the Mariner staff. To approach the bees Mallou wafted smoke from a beekeepers device, into their home.

"Their first reaction is to go and gorge themselves on excess honey because they are led to believe that a fire might destroy their supply as well their home." Thus we were able to observe a colony of very full and docile bees.

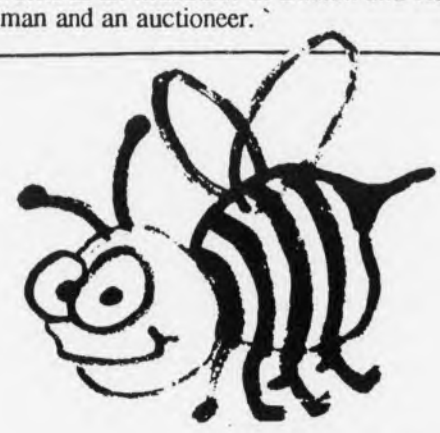
"We don't like to disturb them much," says Judd, "We just check on them to see if the queen is OK and that no diseases have infiltrated the combs."

It is the queens job to lay eggs. In the spring and summer season the bee population rises drastically because more bees are needed to forage nectar.

Mallou and Judd have never had any problem with neighbors even though they have had up to 100,000 bees residing in their backyard.

"It's to everyones benefit," explains Mallou. "It is great for flower gardens, many commercial people have them, the bees help propagate plants. Many times people that own cranberry bogs raise them."

Mallou and Judd, although they are members and graduates of The Norfolk County Beekeepers Association, keep bees mainly for the fun of it.



"We give the honey to family and friends," said Judd. "It's a great present."

Mallou and Judd are a font of bee knowledge. "We're constantly learning new things," said Judd. Peter Mallou works as an illustrator in Boston and Harry Judd is a mailman and an auctioneer.

Peter Mallon and partner Harry Judd show the extensive gear they wear while working with their busy bees.

Peter Mallon (r) and Harry Judd carefully lift the cover off the hive, while Mallon shows the honeycombs on top of the cover.

Family story hours

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library invites school-age children and their parents to a Family Story Hour Monday, July 27 at 7:30 p.m.

This is the third in a series of five evening programs for family enjoyment.

Elaine Weischedel, children's librarian from the Turner Free Library in Randolph, will once again bring her "Story Hat." This is a large story hat which has numerous items pinned to it. Weischedel will ask members of the audience to select "Story Hat" items about which she will then tell a story.

In addition, Weischedel will also tell the "Golly-whopper Egg," a tale of a most unusual egg and what it hatches.

Weischedel tells stories extensively in her own library as well as in the Boston area. Most recently, she has performed at the Castle Island Story Fest. Her program will last about forty five minutes.

Exercise workouts

There is a new and exciting exercise class being held at the South Shore Country Club in Hingham which has attracted local residents.

The class is a cardiovascular workout combined with stretching, strengthening, and relaxation techniques. It is instructed by Normandie Nigh, director of International Council on Sport and Exercise Safety. The Council is a non-profit information-sharing group of exercise scientists from all over the world whose objective is to help the general public by translating technical research information into successful programs which are safe and effective and fun. As a result, people are finding this fitness program to be one which they can enjoy.

Nigh previously worked as the International Aerobics Promotions Manager for Reebok International and has been training aerobics instructors in Australia, Canada, France, Italy, and England. She now lives in Cohasset and is teaching new programs to participants and instructors here.

South Shore residents can experience this new style of workout for themselves by coming to the South Shore Country Club on Tuesday and Thursday evenings from 6:30 to 7:30. The first class is free, instructors are welcome.

New art center impresses sculptors

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

The larger work area with the spacious windows and the bright lighting delighted both teacher and students. And the parents who came to see the final product of their children's efforts were also duly impressed.

Last week, Syma, a favorite artsist among the art center's "regulars", concluded a two-week creative clay class at the new building at 119 Ripley Road.

As the school-aged children proudly displayed their finished work to admiring parents, Syma talked about her new surroundings. "This is a great area for us," she said excitedly. "And what's especially nice, is that we now have our very own kiln. That's a very different experience for the kids here. They dealt with all the little problems, like getting out the air bubbles before it's fired in the kiln. And miraculously, nothing exploded! That's fabulous."

Penny Redfield, education director for the center, said the small building down the street would never accomodate a classroom of students accompanied by their parents."We could never allow so many people in one room and have them move around like this," she said with obvious pleasure at the unique sight. "I think we've had as many comments about our new building from the parents as we did when the kids first came in.

Students give center thumbs up

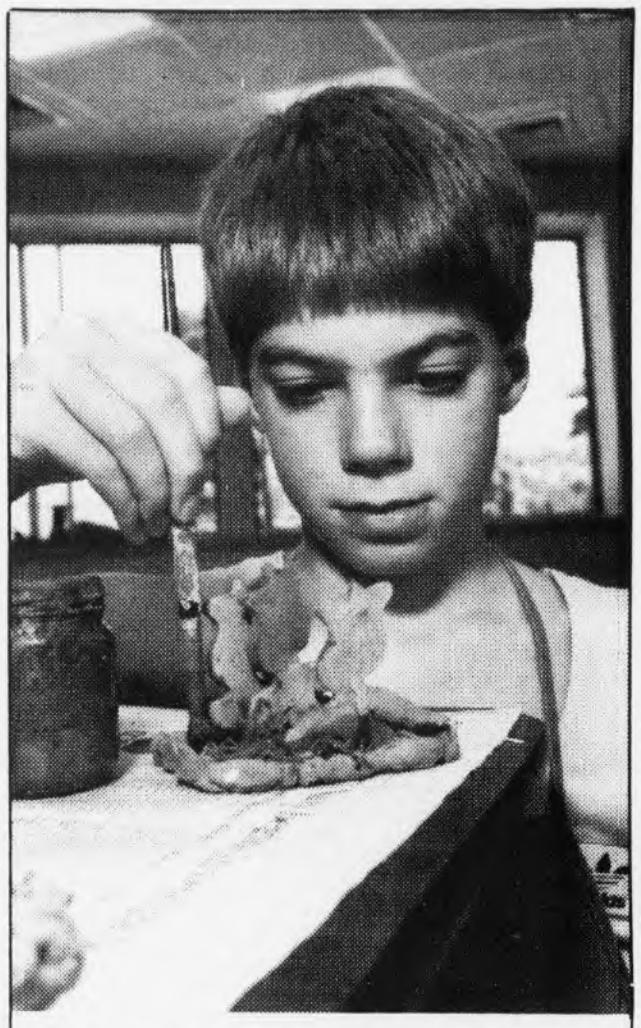
"It's a wonderful treat for all of us," Syma added. "There are two sinks for the children to use, and there's lots of space and lots of air. It's just a better feeling here."

During the four-class program, students in the creative clay class experienced the expression, the feeling and the self-confidence of creating with clay. "It's built up their desire to experiment with it," Syma explained.

Adam Beattie, 9, said he was impressed with the clay and his new workshop area. "I made some neat stuff," he said, eagerly pointing out the items he concocted during the past two week. "I like working with clay - mostly making people." Adam, who lives in Scituate, also made a satellite and a dinosaur. "I liked taking this in the summer, I'll probably do it again," he added.

Adam Poirier is an 8 year-old Marshfield resident. This was his first class in the new building, although he is an experienced artist from the older red building down the street. Adama created a garden, a cat, a pinch pot, a pot holder, a beach scene and a person with some clay and imagination. "I liked doing this," he commented.



Glitter, feathers, buttons and bric a brac decorated each of the festive creations made by the students. As they carefully wrapped each specimen inside newspaper and into a box, they talked excitedly to their parents about their long efforts to produce each individual work.

Julie Hadzipanajotis of Hull said her favorite artistic medium is clay. "When I was little," the eight year-old stated, "I'd dream of making beautiful seals and birds from clay. I like to squish it in my hands."

Julie's creations included two dazzling unicorns, a forest and a fierce dragon.

Beth Paulding of Hingham admitted a creative clay class was a "good way to spend my summer afternoons." She decided to put her hard work to good use. The little dog, cat, pot, frog toothbrush-holder and be given away as stocking stuffers. Julie agreed that one can't start thinking of Christmas too soon.

"I'd definitely like to take more classes here," the nine year-old stated. "I like this place better."

Adam Poirier puts the perfect finishing touches on his pottery creation.

NEWS OF THE PARISH:

Expanding Circles, as the theme suggested by the planning meeting (6/25), includes an increased emphasis on outreach. From some very interesting discussions came two significant "philosophical" positions. First, that besides just writing a check, outreach must include actually helping those in need with "hands on" action. One suggestion receiving strong support was to begin a work camp experience (similar to the one Judy and Steve Ritts were entering) here from our church.

The second position centers around the need to prioritize the direction of outreach mission monies. Using the analogy of the stone tossed into a pond, the ripple effect is strongest nearer the point of origin. Likewise, the gathered members felt that the strongest outreach effort should be placed in "local" outreach (using Mission Co-Chairpersons Steve Bobo and Bill Parmenter's terminology), the second greatest amount to "National" outreach, and the lesser amount to "Off-shore" outreach. In the fall there will be a questionnaire sent to the members and friends of the church, asking for your input on this philosophy and to solicit feedback on some specific outreach opportunities.

ROTOTILLER — needed to borrow to till some of the area behind the parsonage. A larger, heavier tiller with blades behind the wheel and motor is preferable. Call Gary or Judy if you know of a source.

NEWS OF THE COMMUNITY:

Welcome to the Japanese students arriving in the area on July 21 and using our classrooms for four weeks studying American Culture with teacher Mrs. Blake (Jill) Suddath.

Building Zion sermon

At the 9 a.m. family worship hour Sunday, July 26, at the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints at 379 Gardner Street, a high council speaker will address the subject: Building Zion — the perfecting of the Saints.

The stake president has asked that he focus his talk on the areas of: studying the scriptures, holding family home evening, and obeying the commandments and living gospel principles.

Bishop Bradley K. Johnson of the Hingham Ward will conduct the service. Bible study and classes for adults, children and youth will follow until noon. The public is welcome.

St. Marys Parish

All parishioners of St. Mary of the Assumption Parish in Hull, are urged to attend a parish-wide meeting at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 6 at St. Ann's Hall to help decide the parish's future direction on use of church buildings.

Canoe trip on Allagash

While most members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will be attending services at the meetinghouse on Gardner Street, 14 members expect to be holding services in the wilderness near Baxter State Park, Maine.

"Sunday will be a day of rest," said Bob Chatfield of Norwell, leader of the group.

United Methodist social

Friday, Aug. 7, the Harbor United Methodist Church, 55 First Parish Road, will hold a pie and coffee social from 6:30 to 9 p.m. The public is invited.

Lower electric rate

The Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities (DPU) has approved two Eastern Edison Co. proposals to reduce customers' bills.

Effective July 1, Eastern Edison is passing along to customers, savings based on new, lower, federal tax rates and on lower wholesale costs Eastern Edison pays for the electricity it distributes.

The changes result in a savings of 65 cents per month for a residential customer using 500 kilowatthours (kwh) of electricity per month.

Under the new rates, 500 kwh will cost an Eastern Edison residential customer $45.26 — the lowest it has been in a year.

Prop. 2½ was best for communities . . .

to override 2 1/2. Anybody who understands how town government works, realizes proponents or opponents of any rule, of any idea, can easily fill up an auditorium. We are the ones who are going to be directly affected by the change, but they are the ones who will show up and let their voices be heard. The problem is, if we use a simple majority vote, this writer believes that we will revert back to the old ways. The old ways of taxing as the first choice and not the last; the old ways of saying, oh well if we make the wrong decision all we have to do is get a majority vote and we can raise the taxes to pay for it.

We suggest that the legislature take a long hard look and we also suggest that all those people who voted in favor of 2 1/2 and were proven to be correct, let their legislators know that they are not too happy with this majority override proposition. The message we would like to send to those legislators is a very simple one - if it is not broke do not fix it.

Respectfully,
Ronald E. Zooleck
CEO & Vice President
South Shore Chamber of Commerce

Homeless woman files complaint against selectmen

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

Mary Klein, the woman who threatened to legally force the town to provide low income housing, has taken the first step.

Now without a home, she is living in a tent on public land in Cohasset.

Last week, Klein filed a discrimination complaint against the town with the civil rights division of Norfolk County District Attorney's office. The complaint alleges that the town has discriminated against Klein by failing to provide low income housing within the town. Specifically, she explained, "the town has refused to provide affordable housing by refusing to stop the sale of the Independence building and it has failed to act on converting the Government Island housing to an income-related rental property.

"I believe this is an open and shut case," she added. "There is no defense - the town has been caught flat-footed. In any event, I hope to be joined by other low income people and then this will become a class action suit which will take on enormous costs for the town."

Klein, who is one credit shy of a law degree and is currently serving as her own attorney, said she would "like to see this go to a jury trial. I think it would be very interesting to see what a jury thinks of the town of Cohasset."

"Other towns are taking this issue seriously. The town of Cohasset feels they are above it. But the administrators of this town will see that the costs of their incompetent leadership will be enormous."

Klein, who until two weeks ago was "house-sitting" in a Cohasset home, is now camping on public property. But she stated this week that she will likely leave that location, quit her job and apply for public welfare benefits.

"Part of my problem is that camping requires a lot of my time," she explained. "I'm afraid I may have to quit my job and go on welfare. I have a young daughter whom I am forced to leave for hours at a time without a telephone there and no way to communicate with her while I am gone. The responsible thing for me to do is

Ritts return from vacation of their lifetime

By Bob Tis
Mariner Staff

If it is truly better to give than to receive, then Judy Ritts and her son Steve have just returned from the vacation of a lifetime.

The Ritts spent two and a-half weeks in West Virginia working with the Appalachia Service Project helping to build and rebuild homes for needy families.

"The teenagers really got into it," said the elder Ritts. "The kids generate a sense of compassion. It really expands their horizons."

The Appalachian Service project has been doing repairs on homes since 1969. The goal of the group is to enable people to experience the mission and the ministry of the church while extending a helping hand to fellow human beings in the spirit of love and acceptance.

The Ritts joined groups from Iowa, Illinois and their former parish in Fairfield Connecticut.

"In all there were 40 teenagers and sixteen adults," said Steve Ritts a tenth grader at Cohasset High School.

Gary Ritts, minister of the Second Congregational Church, and his wife Judy are both veterans of these Appalachian trips. "It strengtheens people," they explained. "It heightens your awareness."

"All the people that we met and helped were very happy," explained Judy. "They get so excited about Where do you put a 36-foot boat?

Herbert Jason contemplates his future in Cohasset Harbor. (Alan Chapman)

Lobsterman sues for mooring

If you are a taxpayer in Cohasset it might be a good idea to ask Herbert Jason of Cushing Street why there is a new 36-foot lobster boat in his front yard. The boat is the subject of a one million dollar suit that Jason haslist had signed up in 1979 and 1980 respectively.

"These are violations of town bylaws," says Jason.

Harbormaster Ritter did not return the messages left by The Mariner and therefore did not comment on Jason's statements.

"I didn't want to cause any problems," said Jason, "But the next thing you know they skipped over Greg's name."

Jason's next move was to find a spot in the harbor where a mooring was available. "I have conclusive pictures of a place where the boat could go," said Jason.

Unfortunately Jason could not seem to, "get anywhere with Harry." Jason's next move was to go to selectmen who at that time were Diane Sullivan, Frank England, Rocky Laugelle, Cliff Mitman and Mary Jane McArthur."

"Mr. England and Mr. Laugelle were nothing but rude and sarcastic to me," said Jason. "Diane Sullivan was a big help, but she couldn't get Harry to budge either."

Cohasset celebrates it's water

Sandy Beach was packed with people last Saturday, July 25, including volunteers from Save The Harbor/Save The Bay and Clean Water Action Project.

As part of a coast-wide "Clean Water Day", workers armed with literature and scary statistics stalked Sandy Beach seeking donations and support.

"I'm here because I love the water," said Terri Manion, a volunteer from Winchester. "I would hate to see these beautiful beaches become polluted."

Allison Leary, leader of the Sandy Beach volunteers had mixed emotions.

"There are a lot of people who know there is a problem but they are apathetic. The people on this beach just don't seem to be too concerned," she said.

"I'm sorry," said Beach goer Steven Smalzel, "I know it's a problem but I just came down for a swim. I didn't bring any money."

"There are just too many things floating around out there, I'm not going in," said Leary when asked about the water.

"The goal of Clean Water Day," explained Jim Worthington, a volunteer from the Clean Water Action project, is to create community awareness. It is not going to be one judge or any one person. It is going to take a wide spread community response to solve this problem."

The volunteers concentrated on local issues such as the Cohasset Heights landfill and a proposed Boston Harbor sewage outfall pipe 2 and a-half miles off of Nantasket Beach.

Save Our Beaches Inc. asked selectmen for support at this week's meeting.The proposed pipe would release 500 million gallons of poorly-treated sewage from 43 communities into the ocean every day.

"All of the people from Cohasset were very energetic," said Amy Goldsmith, director of the Clean Water action Project. "Clean Water Day raised $15,000 statewide. We also collected 4000 signatures in support of our anti-pollution policy."

Cohasset's week . . .

Town meeting date

Monday, October 26 is the revised date for the fall special town meeting.

Selectmen were informed last week by SEMASS, the trash-to-energy disposal company, that the deadline for authorizing the town's participation in the program is November 1. A contract with the town, if town meeting approves, must be completed by November 30.

Selectmen were considering a September special town meeting, primarily to vote on the SEMASS issue. But Executive Secretary Donald Andrew agreed a later date will provide the disposal area study committee necessary time to review all alternatives.

Landscapers needed

Selectman Rocco Laugelle said two local professional landscapers have submitted plans for landscaping the front of town hall. The plans were drawn by the professionals for free, he noted.

Laugelle requested the assistance from the other professional landscapers in town. If they would like to prepare plans at no cost, they should be submitted to the selectmen's office. He noted that no work will begin until after the town hall addition and renovation project is completed.

Langmaid tribute

A moment of silence was held at the conclusion of Monday night's selectmen' s meeting in memory of Jack Langmaid, a former school committee chairman who died last week.

Selectman James Gallagher noted that Langmaid had worked extensively with youth groups. Although he never served on a town committee with him, Gallagher said, "Everybody told me how well he handled sensitive issues on the school committee."

Selectman Martha Gjesteby said she worked alongside Langmaid for six years on that board. "He was a very interesting person. He loved to challenge the intellect and ideas," she commented.

Sidewalk parking

Selectman Rocco Laugelle has talked with Police Chief Joseph Kealey about the continuing problem of cars parked along the sidewalks throughout the town.

Selectmen voted to send a letter to the chief, requesting that all cars parked illegally over sidewalks be ticketed or towed if necessary.

Selectman Laugelle also suggested that three handicapped parking spaces be allocated in Cohasset Village. Laugelle noted that currently there are no parking spaces marked specifically for handicapped drivers.

Town opposes pipe

Selectmen agreed Monday night to create a local sub committee of the Hull-based Save Our Beaches, Inc.

David Kellum, president of the association, explained to selectmen that a proposed Boston Harbor sewer treatment outfall pipe may be located two and a half miles off Nantasket Beach in Hull. According to Kellum, the Massachusetts Water Resource Authority (MWRA) intends to begin pumping before the treatment plant is completed. For at least five years, he said, the sewage coming out of the pipe will be largely untreated. The daily amount will total at least 25 million gallons of untreated sewage. "There's no question this is going to impact Cohasset," Kellum warned selectmen, saying they were welcome to look at the proposed pipe location.

Selectman James Gallagher, a member of the South Shore Coalition, said the issue had been discussed at a recent meeting. "From Government Island to Minot's Light is only three miles," he explained, noting that is a similar distance between the pipe and Cohasset. "A 25-foot diameter pipe is scary." The selectman noted that the treatment plant will service 55 inland towns, and will not treat waste from any local communities.

A public meeting on the issue is scheduled August 31 at Scituate High School. Representatives of the MWRA, who have been reluctant to discuss these plans publically, Kellum said, have been invited to attend.

He requested that selectmen write letters to their elected officials, opposing the proposed location of the outfall pipe. He also suggested that a subcommittee be formed in Cohasset to assist the Hull-based Save Our Beaches volunteers.

The issue is scheduled to be resolved by November, he explained. Kellum said a broad-based group would yield more lobbying power at the state house. "We must work together to get the MWRA to site this pipe so the environment and the people will not be adversely affected," he stated.

Anyone who would like to financially support Save Our Beaches Inc. is welcome to make donations of $10 or more to P.O. Box 544, Hull, 02045.

John F. Langmaid memorial fund

A fund in memory of John F. Langmaid III has been established to benefit students in the Cohasset school system. The fund will be used to encourage students' participation in and appreciation of music.

Jack was committed to the education of young people in Cohasset and was a member of the school committee from 1977 to 1986, serving as vice chairman for seven years. Interested in the athletic as well as the academic development of children, Jack started the street hockey program in Cohasset.

Contributions can be sent to the John F. Langmaid III Memorial Fund, c/o Cohasset High School, 143 Pond Street, Cohasset 02025.

VFW lease

Ralph Perroncello, commander of the Cohasset VFW Post 9146 has asked selectmen to consider a lease agreement for the former fire station on Hull Street.

The commander stated that the former fire station may be declared surplus in the future. "Our Post is interested in obtaining quarters for its organization," he stated. He requested that selectmen consider a lease arrangement with the Post for the fire station.

New cable line-up

American Cablesystems will begin a new channel line-up beginning September 1.

According to general manager Stephen Farquhar, the new line-up is designed to offer a convenient and easy to remember way to view cable channels. Most channels, he said, will be available on their channel number (such as WBZ-4 on cable channel 04), and all of the most popularly-viewed cable channels will appear lower on the channel line-up.

Farquhar informed selectmen that American Cablesystems will notify all customers of this new channel line-up after August 15. They will be mailed detailed information with new channel cards.

Park harassment

Selectmen have requested town counsel's assistance in resolving the longtime dispute between the Cohasset Riding Club and an abutter to Wheelwright Park.

Sally Davenport of the riding club discussed the latest incident involved the young horse riders and Jacqueline Wirth of Red Gate Lane. Mrs. Wirth submitted a written complaint last week to selectmen regarding the excessive dust that is caused by the horses at the park.

Davenport attended Monday night's selectmen's meeting and expressed the concern that Mrs. Wirth "is again interrupting our lessons. She addresses herself to the children and instructors. I really think something has to happen," she said. "She should not be allowed to harass the kids and the instructors."

After the latest complaint about the dust, Davenport said she had Health Agent Joseph Godzik to look at the area. "He agreed there is not a problem," Davenport stated. "It is a perceived problem - she really doesn't want us there."

Town Counsel previously ruled that the riding club could use the park which was given by the trustees to the town for use by the residents. The riding club, which was given permission to use the park several years ago by selectmen, is an allowed use under the terms of the deed, counsel determined.

Selectman James Gallagher said, "I think this is harassment. They are running a clean show. They have every right to be here. Town counsel said that. We can't let one person harass the citizens of Cohasset."

Selectman Laugelle then suggested that town counsel "proceed with court action." He advised the executive secretary to request assistance from town counsel "and see what we can do to stop this."

Selectman Martha Gjesteby agreed the park is "very neat and clean" and said she was impressed during a recent visit to the area.

Selectmen voted to seek legal action in the matter. Selectman Cliff Mitman was absent from the meeting and Burt Pratt abstained from the vote.

Selectmen want planners to review housing proposal

Selectmen shifted an affordable housing proposal over to the planning board's jurisdiction, telling the developer he must first present a specific plan to that board.

A. J. "Tony" Dougenik, project coordinator for Deck-Point Inc., explained Monday night to selectmen that he simply wanted their initial comments regarding the plan. Deck-Point Inc. will be submitting more detailed plans to construct at least 16 low and moderate income housing units off Rte. 3A.

The proposal which was presented for selectmen's review two weeks ago, includes preliminary drawings to construct eight buildings containing eight, two-bedroom units. The proposed location will be 14. 5 acres on the westerly side of Rte. 3A, bounded by the Whitney Hill technology Center to the south, the state DPW to the west and King Street to the east.

According to the current proposal, between 16 and 20 units will be allocated as affordable housing. Eight will be sold for approximately $86,000 and eight will cost about $110,000.

Dougenik explained he came to selectmen only to receive their initial comments about the proposal, which he admitted contained only rough drawings and estimates. "We went to the housing authority first," he stated, "and they suggested we go to selectmen. We're not trying to create problems for anybody. Deck Point, the owners of the property, have asked me to find out if the town would be receptive to development on this site. I am asking for feedback from you people."

The project coordinator explained that if the state is not in agreement with this plan, then the developer will not commit himself to it.

The state Executive Office of Communities and Development (EOCD) issued a stern order to Cohasset last month, warning that if the town does not locate or construct approximately 12 units of low and moderate income housing, state grant monies will be in jeopardy.

But selectmen told Dougenik this week that his first step should be to review a more detailed plan with the planning board. "Once you get a feeling about this from the planning board, then I could tell you what I think about it," Selectman Rocco Laugelle stated.

"That is their expertise," Selectman James Gallagher added.

Dougenik reiterated he was only seeking preliminary comments from selectmen about the plans.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby noted she would like to see more than 25 percent of the total set aside as affordable units. Dougenik explained that for every three market-value units, the developer will be building three low or moderate income units. However, each of the units must be the same quality as the apartments that will be sold at market value. "We're trying to keep the project affordable," he stated. "They'll be more in the $150,000 range for the market units. With a three-to-one ratio, we will be able to afford the affordable units. It's a matter of economics."

Planning board member Dan Cotton said the board would need more details before they could make definitive comments about the plan.

Katherine Stanton of Clay Spring Road asked selectmen if this proposal didn't constitute spot zoning. "They'd be putting housing units up there surrounded by industrial buildings and the landfill. It'll be like a Columbia Point. They're putting all those units in one area that is under 10,000 square feet. That's a congested area," she said. "The whole area is zoned light industry. Why just change one spot for low income?"

Mary Klein, who indentified herself as a low income Cohasset resident, said a scattered site affordable housing program is the most appropriate solution, "not a cluster of low income units in an undesirable area. That's bound to create a Columbia Point."

Selectman Gallagher agreed the EOCD has stated its preference for scattered affordable housing sites throughout the town.

Deck Point attorney Sol Feldman explained the proposal is a mixture of affordable and market-value units. The state financing authority has said this is the "best way to integrate affordable and expensive housing," he noted. "This is a mixed development."

In a related issue, Executive Secretary Donald Andrew, who helped draft a memo of agreement between Cohasset and the EOCD, told selectmen the state has received the document. The memo outlines a timetable in which Cohasset has agreed to provide low and moderate income housing units.

In the meantime, Andrew stated, he will apply for a mini-grant which will provide the town with assistance in planning a housing program.

The planning board recently submitted written notations to selectmen regarding the issue of fair housing. According to planning board member Cotton, "our (planning board) job is to accommodate needed housing while preserving the thing that makes our town such a desirable place to live in - its unique character."

He continued, "the state wants subsidized housing to be dispersed in order to avoid stigma and presumably to encourage assimilation, and as much as possible, to be in the private sector. The state is vague in its demands, saying 'Cohasset knows best its own needs' while giving little or no indication of what would satisfy those demands."

The state TELLER program, he said, which calls for four housing units for every required subsidized unit, "is a potential bonanza for unscrupulous developers and a disaster for the town. "

A land bank program could be created, the planning board suggested, in which a town agency could purchase suitable houses and house lots when they become available and turn them over to the progran. "This would achieve the stated goals of dispersed housing and would do it in orderly fashion," Cotton stated in the letter. "If the town has land or buildings that, after serious consideration, make sense to be turned over to the program, so much the better, but that should not be done under threat of suit or reprisal."

In summary, the planning board noted that although it is the moral responsibility of those more fortunate to assist those in need, "it is not for us to allow, let alone participate in the dissolution of the thing that can make everyone concerned a little better off."

Klein files complaint against town not to indulge in work. I don't enjoy the prospect of welfare, but without a decent home, I don't see an alternative.

I am an extremely hard-working person," she continued. "In fact, I am always complimented on how hard I do work. But the fact is, I can't work 12 hours a day with a child who is left unsupervised. That's not the way I was raised."

Klein added, "I have not had a vacation in 22 years. I own a five-inch black and white television which we just recently purchased. And I have high medical expenses. I don't feel defensive about my situation - I think I'm doing a better job raising my child than a lot of other parents."

The longtime Cohasset resident is attempting to stop the impending sale of the town-owned Independence building on Elm Street. That structure, which was once used as the town's fire station, police station and then an historical gown museum,is slated for sale to Atty. Noel Collins. His $86,579 bid was the highest selectmen received for the building nearly two years ago.

Klein pleaded with selectmen to stop the sale, saying the building could be converted into a residence for modest-income families. Selectmen refused, explaining they were legally bound to follow through with the sale.

The sale has been delayed for 17 months while the property was surveyed and a deed was recorded. The proposed residence must now be approved by the zoning board of appeals before Collins is given title to the building and surrounding land. The planning board decided last week that a 2,161 square-foot plot of town common land that surrounds the building will be included in the sale.

"I plan to go to the zoning board of appeals hearing on the matter," Klein stated, "to protest the sale of town common land. That land belongs to every person in this town and if it is going to be sold, the issue should be resubmitted to town meeting. It should be included in the special town meeting this fall if the town feels it is under constraints to sell the place."

Klein protested the way in which town meeting two years ago voted to sell the property. "It was slipped in with a bunch of other repairs the town was making to its buildings. And the voters were told "the town had no need" for this building. It was sold as a potential residential property - clearly to avoid low income use. The administration of this town is so afraid that low income means black people, untidy curtains, children running around the yard and rusty cars. They are denying their moral responsibility, because there are low income people here right now."

Regarding the discrimination complaint, Klein said she hoped to gain additional support for a class action lawsuit against the town. "I hope enough people come forward and will be a part of this. They would not have to be part of the publicity surrounding this. They would not have to be part of sneering that I have received since I became public with this issue. But many people can benefit by a decision against the town. And the more people involved, the more likley there will be a positive result. If more people join, then this just won't be a cause against me."

The town administrators who have refused to stop the sale of the building, and who "have refused to act on converting the Government Island housing to low income, should be held accountable for their leadership," she stated. "The town is a victim of bad advice. This is an issue that will not go away and it will cost the town a fortune to bail themselves out at this point."

Klein, who has received "embarrassed, sneering" looks and comments since her plight was publicized, said nothing hurts more than the ridicule her daughter has confronted from other children in town.

"But I will not move," she said firmly. "I will be here to see this thing through. Maybe I could get the state to start a shelter here which would help the neighboring towns. The end result is that the town has refused to take logical action. It's like ignoring the balding tires on your car until your driving along 128 and you face disaster. This could have been an easily-rectified problem." Klein said although many people have expressed sympathy toward her, she is still without a home.

Her camping situation is becoming unbearable in a three-person tent without running water or plumbing facilities. There are ticks in the wooded area surrounding the tent, she said, preferring not to devulge the location by explaining it would bring further shame and ridicule to her daughter.

"The view is lovely and we can still hear the bells of St. Stephen's to remind me we are still in Cohasset," she said. "But I've promised my daughter we'll stay only another week. After that, I don't know. It is an area where the public can come, so I can't leave my daughter alone for long hours."

Klein said the reaction to her public statements have been largely negative. "We are confronting the pretensions of this town. No one likes their weaknesses paraded in front of them," she said, contemplating a new location to camp next week. "Maybe we should go to a more public place. The town plans to spend thousands to renovate the duck pond so maybe we can camp out on the town common and they can help us out at the same time. Our situation would really get some attention if we camped out on the common.

"The town has to sit up and pay attention. If by my aggravation they become more aware, then so be it. But this town is making some bad economic decisions now and it is affecting me and many others personally," she said, adding, "Maybe it's time for a tent city in Cohasset."

Anyone who would like to contact Klein may write to her at P.O. Box 633 in Cohasset.

Coalition opposes sewer pipe off Hull coast

By Marilyn Jackson
Mariner staff

The South Shore Coalition wants the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority to postpone deciding where the new Deer Island sewer outfall pipe should be located in Boston's outer harbor.

Local officials from the 10 coalition towns fear that the MWRA's solution to cleaning up Boston's inner harbor will become a future problem for the South Shore coastal communities.

But, noted Hanover Selectman Janet O'Brien, coalition chairman, the MWRA's decision will affect the North Shore as well.

Pointing to a map of Massachusetts Bay, Hull Selectman John Silva said one of the proposed outfall sites is 6.5 miles from Deer Island but is just 2.5 miles off Allerton Bluff.

Another proposed site is six miles from Deer Island, but four miles from Nahant, Silva said, and the one farthest out — nine miles — is six miles from Nahant and 7.5 miles off Hull.

"They are not looking to the future," complained Weymouth Selectman Brian McDonald, who noted that the MWRA is planning to give only a primary treatment to the sewage from the 46 communities in its district.

"They cannot continue to dump in the bay," McDonald said.

He said that if the coalition urges the MWRA to hold out for secondary treatment of the sewage, that would alienate the residents of Quincy, Weymouth, Boston and Winthrop.

At present, treatment plants on Deer Island and Nut Island process sewage from 2.4 million residents in 46 communities.

During rainy weather, as much as a billion gallons of untreated sewage empties into Boston Harbor, according to environmental officials.

O'Brien said the MWRA's acting engineer on the $2.5 billion project, along with engineers from Camp, Dresser and McKee, would meet with the coalition Thursday, Aug. 13, at the Scituate High School library to discuss the project.

Previously, the MWRA had sent its public relations people, not policymakers, to the coalition.

"Not everybody's agenda is the same," said O'Brien. "There are three parts — economic, scientific and political.

"We've asked (to give direction) and put it in the political (arena)," she said.

Selectmen from all 10 communities — Duxbury, Marshfield, Scituate, Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Weymouth, Rockland, Hanover and Norwell — are urged to attend the Aug. 13 meeting, she said.

In addition, American Cablesystems, which has franchises in six of the 10 towns, will videotape the meeting, O'Brien said.

At last week's coalition meeting, Marshfield Planner Michael Almada said the coalition should ask MWRA to ensure that the wastewater discharge be as good a quality as that which it is being discharged into.

That would be consistent with the federal Environmental Protection Agency standards and the Clean Waters Act, he said.

O'Brien asked rhetorically whether secondary treatment of the sewage would be sufficient.

Hingham Selectman John Brady said he favored extending the outfall pipe to the ocean, but not at the expense of the neighbors in Hull, Cohasset and Scituate.

Hull Selectman Silva charged that the MWRA was not considering any deep-water, way-out outfall site.

In California, he said, one outfall pipe is 26 miles from land.

"It's a financial consideration," Silva continued. "They have set a limitation on themselves, and a true deep-water site is not even under consideration.

He noted that the federal government will pay 50 percent of the construction costs of the outfall pipe in the inner harbor but will not pick up construction costs outside the inner harbor.

Silva told the coalition members that the Hull selectmen voted last week to set aside funds for special counsel to intervene in the federal suit before U.S. District Court Judge David Mazzone who ordered the Boston Harbor cleanup.

Silva said other communities would be asked to join in Hull's efforts to have a voice in the MWRA's decisions.

"We're beginning the process now because we don't want to wait until November (when the outfall siting decision is scheduled to be made), then begin seeking legal counsel. . .

"Our bayside is closed, and the ocean stands to be fouled," said Silva. "It's a no-win (situation) for us.

"Tell us how it makes sense to dump into the ocean, befouling a new body of water while cleaning up the old body of water.

"Is this a solution, or a political release to get through court," Silva asked. "Or 10 years from now, will (the MWRA) be under a new court mandate to clean up the outer harbor and the South Shore?"

Coalition members agreed that whatever proposal is approved, it will carry a heavy pricetag.

Said O'Brien: "This organization recognizes the need for broad-based funding. It should be more than a federal subsidy and rate-payers.

"We support looking to finding other sources of funding," she continued. "They are looking for the cheapest and most environmentally sensitive way."

South Shore Coalition briefs

Housing workshop

The South Shore Coalition has been awarded a $7,500 "bridge loan" to plan a housing workshop and a solid waste disposal conference in the fall.

Jean Christensen, director of the coalition, said Sen. William Golden, D-Weymouth, had helped the coalition obtain the grant.

She said the coalition would also look into how the restoration of the Old Colony Railroad would affect land prices.

In addition, the coalition plans to look at the impact of self-contained, package wastewater treatment plants which can be constructed on land on otherwise unbuildable land.

"That can open up a lot of land," she said. She said Weymouth would not be concerned as the town is sewered, but other communities would be interested.

Christensen said the feasibility of such a package treatment plant increases dramatically where there would be a high profit margin.

She added that Sudbury is in litigation over the issue of package treatment plants.

Solid waste meeting

The South Shore Coalition's subcommittee on solid waste will meet at 7:30 p.m. Thursday at Norwell town hall.

Other scheduled meetings include a transportation task force meeting Aug. 11 at which state public works officials will discuss the widening of Route 3.

David Soule, director of the Metropolitan Area Planning Council which represents 101 communities, said a conference will be held Sept. 10 in Somerville to discuss two recent court decisions — the U.S. Supreme Court decision on landtaking and a New Jersey high court decision about public access to beach property.

Soule also urged the coalition members to attend the public hearing on the state transportation bond issue at Gardner Auditorium at the State House Aug. 19.

Beach rake purchase

Members of the South Shore Coalition will explore the feasibility to purchase jointly a beach rake.

Coalition director Jean Christensen reported that Marshfield was interested in buying a rake to clean seaweed from the beaches.

Hull Selectman John Silva said he may be interested in the proposal but needed to know whether the machine would meet approval of the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering.

"Hull is under superseding conditions as to how we can clean up the beach," said Silva.

Scituate Selectman Gerald Dwight asked to what depth would the rake be able to clean up seaweed. Can it clean up to 18 inches thick with flies?, he asked.

Scituate Planner Janet Humphrey said town workers pick up debris by hand.

Marshfield Selectman John MacMahon said he was interested in the joint purchase. "We need it."

Seven of the 10 coalition towns might be interested, said Christensen. She showed a videotape of a particular model of a surf rake which was attached to a four-wheel-drive agricultural tractor which could travel up to speeds of nine miles an hour.

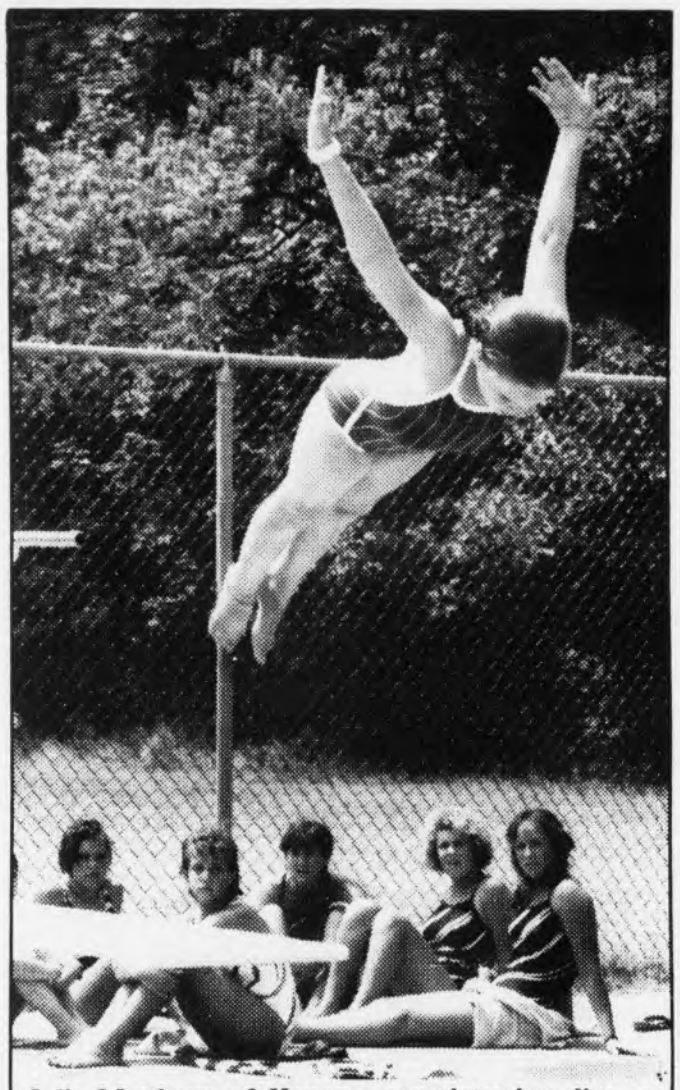
'Our kids were great!'

The Cohasset swim team improved its record to three wins and no losses last Friday, July 24 overpowering Hanover by a score of 385 to 256.

Cohasset coaches John Jackson and Eric Karcher said they were equally as impressed by Cohasset's inspirational display of spirit as they were with the team's raw talent. "Our kids were great," John and Eric agreed.

"As for Hanover," the coaches continued, "we felt they had some outstanding individual talent, but lacked the depth and spirit of our swimmers."



The meet began with Cohasset divers Amy Hobbs and Michelle Massa capturing first and third respectively in 16 and under diving. The 12 and under divers then complemented the 16's with Kate deLima capturing first and Colby Lawrence taking fourth place.

Hanover jumped out to an early lead, winning the first three races. Cohasset, however, would not be phased. Answering Hanover with four straight victories in the individual medley events were Sara Bishop, Jon deLima, Nif Jackson, and David Lahey.

David changed the lead for the first and last time and from then on Cohasset never looked back. "We grabbed the lead and just continued to build on it," coaches Jackson and Karcher commented. They admitted that they did not expect to walk away so easily with a victory. "We're always optimistic," said the coaches, "but we and our swimmers were ready for our toughest meet. . . " Their preparation obviously paid off.

First place winners in individual events were: Sara Bishop (2), Jon deLima (3), Nif Jackson (3), David Lahey (2), Doug Cameron (1), Lauren DeVito (3), Ben Redfield (1), Becky Golden (2), Chip Anderson (2), Brooke Anderson (1), Amy Hobbs (2), Scott Theriault (1), Meaghan Staunton (1), Pete O'Leary (1), Danny Baird (1), Allison Doherty (1), Veronica DeVos (1), Greg Schultz (1), Heather Littlehale (1), Stacy Pierce (1), and Topher Henderson (1).

The Cohasset swimmers go against Scituate Harbor Yacht Club this Friday at 1 p.m. at the town pool. Come be a part of the action. The Cohasset coaches promise their team will "stay illin." (psyched) Congratulations to one and all and let's do it again next Friday!!

The great news is that Greg hit his third homerun in Little League last week . . . he got two of the three in one day! Greg is the only one to "hit it otta here" this season, and we sure do congratulate him! The bad news is that Greg won't be around to help the CHS Baseball team in the future, he and his family are moving to Rancho Santa Fe, California next month! Greg and his family sure have contributed a lot to Cohasset and we will miss them all!! We sure bet that when Greg is playing baseball next November he won't miss snowy Cohasset! He sure will have his choice of sports to play there, whenever he wants to. Good luck to the Pyle family, we sure hope you keep in touch.

☐ Julie Hoogeveen, daughter of Larry and Dotty Hoogeveen, is spending the summer in Kenya! Julie was awarded a writing fellowship from the Dana Foundation and is writing and working for "Rainbow Magazine" in Nairobi. She left in May, spent a short time in London before arriving in Kenya. Her first week in Nairobi she attended classes in language and culture and has continued classes in swahili. She enjoys talking to the people, says they are very friendly. Julie says every day is a new adventure. She has travelled extensively and says there are many beautiful places to see. When Julie returns in Augsut, she will stop in Germany for a week. She is a 1984 graduate of Cohasset High and will be a senior at Wheaton College in the fall where she is on the Dean's List.

Souppes for everyone

For the past month, Cohasset has been host to a number of French-speaking teens. They were not part of an educational entourage from Europe. They became our friends and extended family members from the sister town of Souppes Sur Loing.

For four weeks, these young teens were inseparable from our own. They swam at sandy Beach, sailed in our harbor, ate in our homes, and shared conversations will our sons and daughters.

Simply because someone was not a host family, did not mean they were not affected by this sharing between sister towns. And that is an important distinction to be made.

Some families were naturally hesitant about bringing a foreign teenager into their home. The language problems, which can produce some anxiety, were natural concerns for many families.

But they were not real concerns at all, they soon learned. Despite a few hours of hesitancy between the families and their Souppes children, they learned quickly how to work through that problem and communicate effectively. Music, laughter and good food are easy ways to break down any imagined barriers.

The Souppes teens learned quickly to love our town. They enjoyed the simple things the most - a shopping trip to the mall, a swim at Sandy Beach or a tennis match. These are the things they will remember about our town - it's beauty and its people.

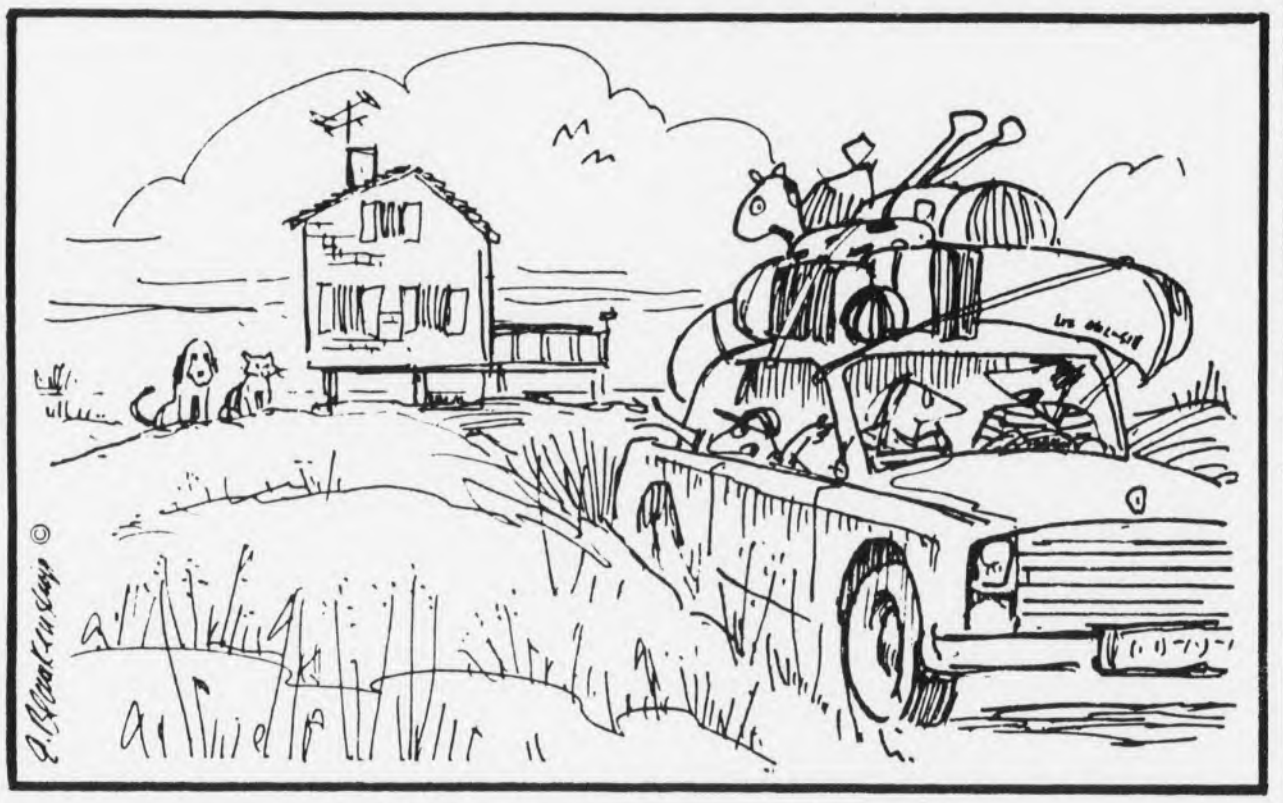
All residents should realize our sister-city relationship is not limited to the few members of the cultural exchange committee or town officials. Everyone is invited to share in our unique opportunity.

Many of our children became acquainted with the kids from Souppes. Whether we realized it or not, they met them at the beach, at the town pool or at the mall. They were a vital part of the success of this first group exchange between Cohasset and Souppes Sur Loing.

There promises to be more exchanges. It is an exciting opportunity for us to open our homes to our friends from far away. We can learn so much from our differences and similarities.

And now we have the opporunity to visit their homeland. Anyone who is planning a trip to Europe or Paris, should plan also to visit the quaint village of Souppes. They will be welcomed with enthusiastic, open arms, the exchange committee assures us.

This program is not open to a select few. It is a community project and can not succeed without participation by many people.



We are all urged to take part in this educational and personal experience. It is an opportunity for our children to grow and for families to learn together.

Families miss Souppes friends

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

Many homes are emptier and many hearts are lonelier following last week's departure of the teenagers from Souppes Sur Loing.

For three weeks, an entourage of nine teens from our French sister city have visited the shops along Main Street, swam along Sandy Beach and in the town pool, and traveled to nearby cities and tourist attractions.

Reluctantly, the teenagers boarded a plane to Paris last Friday afternoon, July 24, filled with memories of their American families and friends.

Although the teens were paired with certain Cohasset families, they became good friends with many children and their families throughout the town.

Mary Lou Lawrence, a member of the Cultural Exchange Committee who helped to establish this summer's exchange program, explained, "We became very, very close to these kids. They were part of our family. But they also touched the lives of many other people in town. They got to know so many other kids and their parents. I hope everyone realizes that the entire town, not simply this committee or the few exchange families, is involved in this program.

"Every resident of Cohasset should realize we can't have this wonderful oportunity without their involvement," she added.

Together, the Souppes teens and the Cohasset families struggled past the communication barrier with good humor and at least one pocket dictionary constantly by their side. The French students were more adept at English than our children were with French language, everyone agreed.

But somehow, Lawrence admitted, the language difficulties were not really problems at all. After the first night with their new friends, everyone seemed comfortable despite their hesitant conversations.

The Waal family of Old Pasture Road was the temporary guardian of Jean Guillaume Mathiault. Jean is 15 years old - a perfect companion for Erik Waal, 13.

Among the adventures Jean will long remember, he said before his departure last week, was the July Fourth parade in Hingham. Small by our standards, Jean said the music and the marching bands made this parade far different from the military parades he is accustomed to seeing in France.

"It was funnier," he said, searching for the proper adjective to describe his amusement.

An outing on Bassings Beach and the Sailing Club were also high on his list of favorite places. "I liked visiting new countries," Jean said, explaining that he particularly enjoyed his trip with the Waals to the White Mountains on New Hampshire.

Erik said the first night with his new friend was "mass hysteria" but that feeling was immediately subdued with the assistance of a pocket dictionary. He and Jean became close friends, they agreed, adding that it will be difficult to adjust to their separation.

Families will miss their friends from Souppes

"I know Cohasset like a book," Jean said with confidence, explaining that he could ride around town on Erik's bike with little difficulty. "I do not miss home. I would like to move here."

That was the identical expression voiced by all the Souppes teens who visited Cohasset. They admitted they missed home and family, but they preferred the "green and white" surroundings of our beautiful town.

His sister, Geraldine, 17, stayed with the Dean family, and became close friends with Alida Dean, 15. It will be a difficult transition when they are separated, they quickly acknowledged.

Geraldine said she "really liked the beach" at Cohasset, noting that Sandy Cove is much nicer and different than their lake at Souppes. She loved traveling into Boston with her friend, Alida. They spent a lot of time there, going to museums, the aquarium, and to a Bastille Day party on Marlboro Street. "Boston is similar to Paris," Geraldine said.

"I like that very much," she laughed, admitting that they had met a few boys there who persisted with telephone calls days later. A pretty teenager with dark hair and eyes, Geraldine was in sharp contrast to her American friend who is blonde.

Despite their differences, they were very much alike, they said. They both love shopping and did quite a bit, Alida stated.

"What I liked best here is the life Americans have," Geraldine said, searching with help from her friend for the correct words. "I liked the architecture, the houses, the country. Here it is so natural, so cute and quaint."

The pair are making plans to meet next summer - Alida said she would like to travel to Souppes to visit her new friend. Geraldine explained the Deans were "not really friends, they were family. I will miss them. They were very nice with me."

Fanny Drouet spent four weeks in Cohasset, splitting the time with the Welz family and with Jim and Rita Kirk. Her parents were scheduled to pick her up in Cohasset, stay a few days here and travel on to Los Angeles where her father has business.

During her time in Cohasset, Fanny,13, was befriended by Ali Welz and Rebecca Kirk. "I visit Cohasset and go to Boston," she explained. "I see aquarium and go to the pool and to the beach. I go to Martha's Vineyard for the fireworks - very good."

Fanny said the favorite memory she will take back to France will be of her American families. She will miss her friends and "everything" about her sister city.

One of the few things she did not enjoy, she laughed, included Coca Cola. Fanny loved pizza - "that's good!" she announced, along with personal favorites, English muffins, hamburgers at McDonald's and hot dogs.

Marie-Pierre Ballot

"I will miss the water here. I loved the beach," she added. "I will miss the swimming."

Rob Lawrence, 13, was worried about the language differences before he met his new friend and roommate, Florian Prevost, 14. "I don't take French. I take Latin," he explained. "I was worried."

But it was needless, his mother, Mary Lou, confided. "They were born under the same sign, and they think the same way. Language was no barrier for them. It took them a matter of hours to figure out the language - even the swears."

With a sly smile, the pair laughed. "I knew a bit of English," Flo admitted. "After dinner (the first night) we talked about music and the way of life."

Flo and Rob liked to play tennis together and to sail. They went into Boston's Quincy Market and to the North End for dinner. When asked if he had met any girls Flo answered, "yes. " But he quickly added there was no one special. "I like An.erican girls," he smiled.

"I think I come back," Flo added, noting that Rob has become his good friend. Mary Lou explained that the French teens really didn't miss home that much because of their daily contact with each other.

Flo's favorite food here was scrod and gum - not eaten at the same time. Mary Lou said her "Souppes son" gained two kilos during his stay. "He loved it all - the Doritos, the candy and Coke," she stated, noting that the junk food held a particular attraction to him, despite his mother's reputation as an accomplished cook.

Marie Pierre Ballot was the oldest French visitor, and perhaps the most fluent in English. The 21 year-old said she will always remember the people of Cohasset. "The people are very, very nice. I saw a lot of the families and they were all very nice," she explained. "I am very happy to be here.

"I am happy about going home, but I want to come back," she added.

Nicholas Paineau said he was "happy and not happy" about his impending departure. "I get to know a lot of people better," he said.

The Souppes teens, including Marine Parmelan, and Carole Pietri, will miss the American cuisine, everything from lobsters to junk. With a loud "yeah," the assembled group yelled their approval of American-made ice cream. Pudding Pops were another favorite - Corrina Minnar noted that her family has gone through three boxes in the past few weeks.

"I loved lobster," Marie said, patting her stomach and noting she had put on some weight since her arrival. "I will have to go home and diet."

Peanut butter was consumed by the jarful along with gallons of orange juice.

When asked what American students can do if they travel to Souppes, the teens replied, "go to our lake, the zoo and to Paris. There are lots of things to see there."

The girls said there is more freedom for the boys back home, because they are allowed to go out at night. Girls are restricted to the home unless accompanied by parents.

They agreed language was no problem - even from the start. Souppes and Cohasset kids have too much in common, they said. "We love to go shopping," Carole stated. "It's more expensive here. But I loved to go to the malls."

Marie added, "I would like to stay here. But we would like our friends to come back. Of course, someday I will come back."

She added, "I think it is a good idea that we are sister towns."

Appalachia service project 'rewarding'

everything. They love to talk and laugh, and to enjoy the goodness of life."

The Appalachia Service Project makes arrangements with families in the mountainous counties to send in work crews of about ten people to make repairs on their home.

"The mines have almost all shut down," explained Judy Ritts. "It is a desolate situation - there is not too much hope that the mines will open. Most people are on some sort of fixed income."

Each work group of teenagers is armed with a basic construction manual, a lot of enthusiasm and one or two adult supervisors. Steve and his group implanted a foundation for a house in one site and constructed an addition on another home. Judy and her group managed to fit a tin roof onto a mountainside home among other spartan tasks. At night the groups met at the service center which is usually a schoolhouse and listened to local speakers and traded stories of the day.

"Appalachian culture is an entity in itself," explained Ritts. "The stories of the mines and the disasters are amazing and the songs show the history of their struggle."

"We pay for our own transportation and food," said Ritts. "It is a somewhat expensive project."

"Working, laughing and sharing stories opens the teenagers up. The work gets you so tired that it breaks down your facade. The kids discovered that we are all just people and that's what it is all about." said Judy Ritts.

"You also learn a great sense of stewardship; nothing is wasted, crumbs from sandwiches go to feed the ducks," explained Ritts.

You also have to use your mind quite a bit. It is a long workday full of carpentry, which requires quite a bit of mental activity, she added.

"It can be very frustrating," said Gary Ritts. "It is not the best of situations."

"The kids have to learn inch by inch," said Judy Ritts.

"Everyone is usually very supportive," added Gary Ritts. "The skill level is usually a success story; the people are so appreciative for the work that you do, they work with you."

Workshops are held for the teenagers and the adults before leaving for Appalachia.

"They work on things like getting rid of stereotypes and other kinds of sensitivity training, " said Judy Ritts.

Ritts explained that it can be a touchy situatuion arriving at someones home.

"They are often shy and reserved when you first meet them; they are a very proud people," said Ritts of the native Appalachians. "Humor is a great thing, we found out that we could laugh together so we knew we could work together."

Steve and his mom, Judy, relax after returning from their trip to Appalachia.

(Alan Chapman)

"The large majority of the homes do not have running water or electricity," explained Ritts. There is absolutely no tax base to work from; there is no Salvation Army where you can get cheap clothes. There are a lot of big pockets of extreme poverty."

Gary Ritts is the Minister of The Second Congregational Church in Cohasset. The Ritts' are eager to start a similar work project for the youth of Cohasset.

"It takes the support of the whole community," said Judy Ritts. "It is really a great learning opportunity."

Town to vote plans

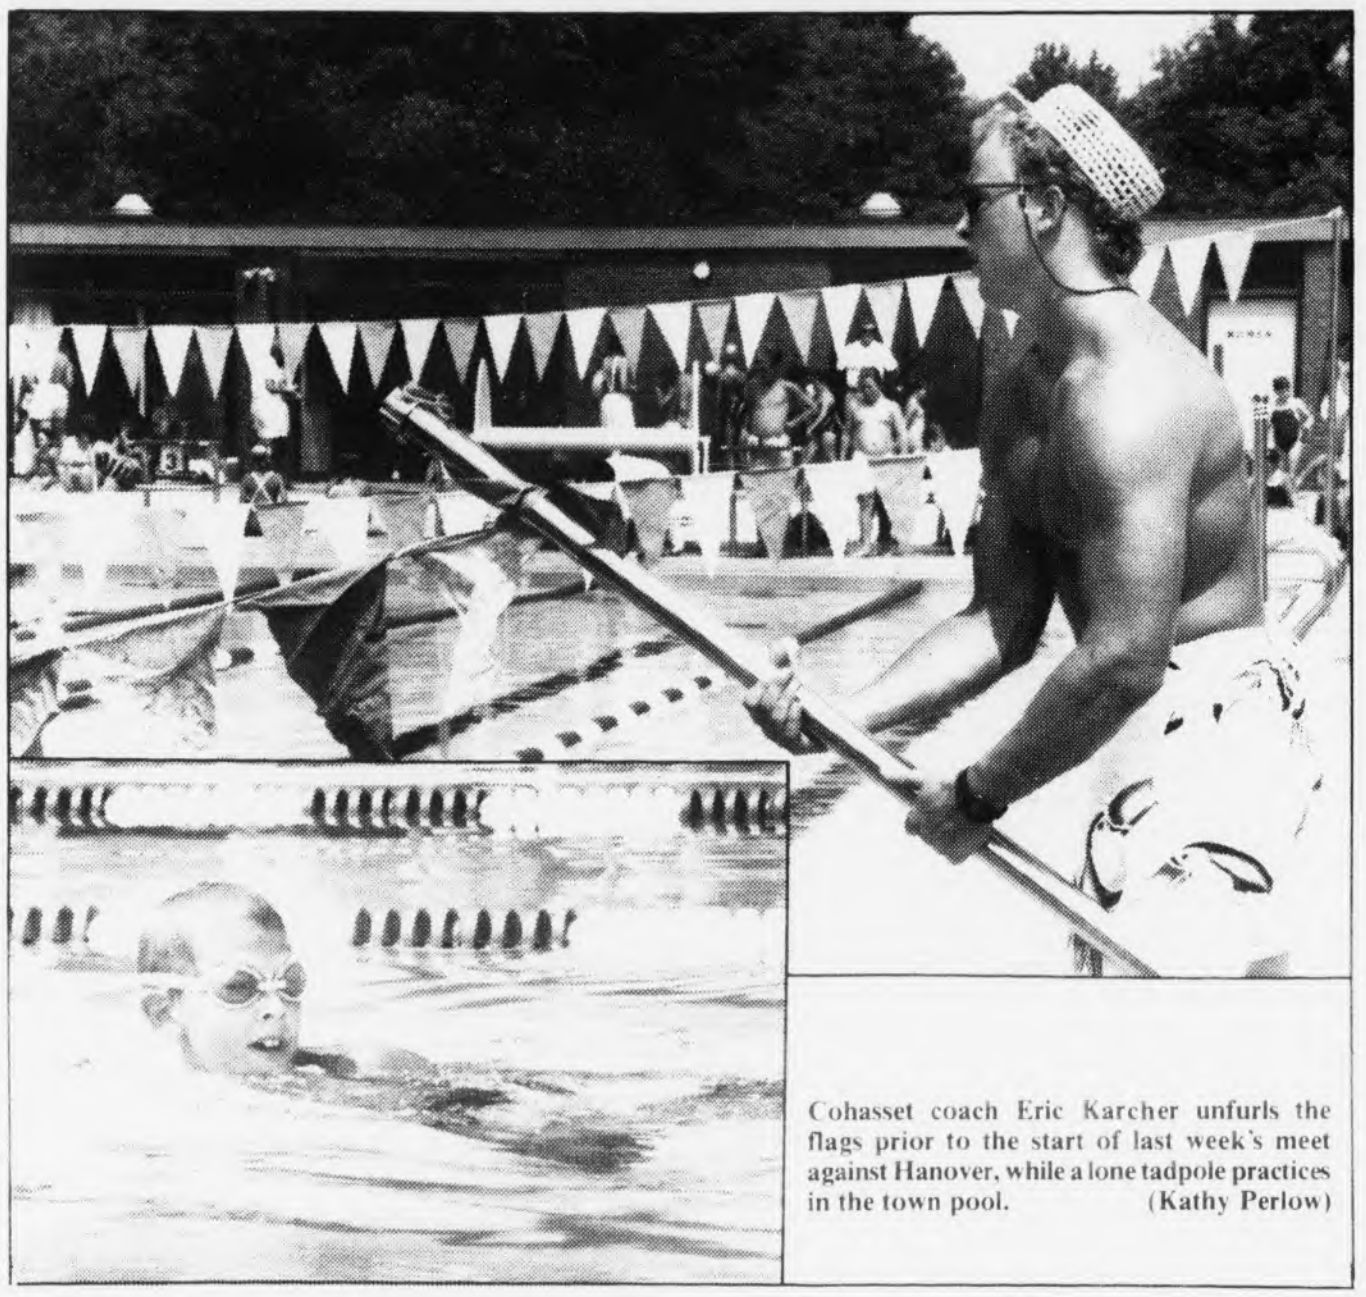
Plans for the proposed $1 million police and fire station renovations will be presented to town meeting voters October 26.

The advisory board and the capital budget committee met Monday night with the police and fire station study committee and architect Joseph Putnam to review plans for the proposed revamping of the police and fire station.

"Our main concern of course is the cost of this thing," said Ned Tebbets, chairman of the capital budget committee. "I think that we will probably support it."

Bob Stansell of the police and fire committee said, "We intend to have this on the warrant at the next town meeting."

The next town meeting is slated for the third weekend in October. The approximately $1 million renovation project is a bond issue and will require a two-thirds majority vote from town meeting.



"I'm concerned about the number of projects coming down the line. It is only human nature, but everyone is most concerned about their own project," said Jane Goedecke, chairman of the advisory board. "There are still a lot of issues that need to be resolved. We are going to have to carefully review the warrant articles before we decide if we are going to support this," added Goedecke.

Some of the matters that are still being ironed out include a weight training room and a classroom for the fire station, as well as the living quarters.

"I think that dormitory style architecture should have gone out with World War II," said Fire Chief Daniel Brock. "I don't think that it is fair to have your town employees living in those conditions."

Firefighters usually work two 10-hour day shifts and two 14-hour night shifts in the course of a week.

"We are ready to go with this project," said Diane Sullivan of the police and fire study committee. "We believe there is a great need."

Jason suing town for $1 million . . .

According to Jason at the January 6, 1986 meeting, selectman admitted that Small had been wronged by the actions of the harbormaster.

"Even though they admitted that a big mistake was made they said that we would still have to wait until the name came back up on the mooring list," said Jason.

"I've been working in this harbor for 55 years and I know there are spots available. Harry just has to get off his butt and start moving boats," said Jason.

"After that meeting, Selectman England said to me, 'take it to court if you want to'," said Jason, "Well, I got a lawyer and did just that."

The case has just been transferred to federal court.

"I'm going to win this case. I want the taxpayers of Cohasset to know that everyday that the boat sits there in my yard they are losing money," said Jason.

"I've got conclusive pictures," said Jason.

The pictures show a similar-sized boat from many different angles moored safely in potential mooring locations.

Jason claims that Ritter has a "old wound" vendetta against him and the Smalls.

"The part that I don't like is that the selectmen backed him up," said Jason.

"It is an $85,000 boat," continues Jason, "I can't get any sort of insurance "roosting" on a temporary mooring."

"There is a mooring available right now," said John Small. "This would end all of the damages that just keep piling up, I don't know what the town counsel is thinking about."

"It is a town bylaw that when a mooring spot comes up for use that the next person on the list will be offered that spot," reiterated Jason. "Harry did not do this."

Don Andrew, executive secretary for the selectmen said the town will not comment on matters when litigation is pending.

Steve Osborne takes over as harbormaster August 1.

"He seems like a very conscientious kid. He is very cooperative, and looking to make some needed improvements," Jason said hopefully.

"Invited to go sailing! What will you bring?"

Travel agency offers unique service

The trials and tribulations of making phone reservations no longer have to inhibit the travel plans of local deaf people. Cohasset Travel now has a unique service for the hearing impaired that enables them to communicate by telephone.

"Any deaf person could call me here and make arrangements over the phone just like you or me, explained Karen Klien, who brought this revolutionary idea to the travel service.

The device that makes this possible is a teletypewriter developed by ATand T. The TTY has a special modum that connects to the mouthpiece and the earphone of any normal telephone. Once this hookup is achieved full sentences can be sent from a keyboard on the TTY. A small screen on the TTY flashes the typewritten words of the other party.

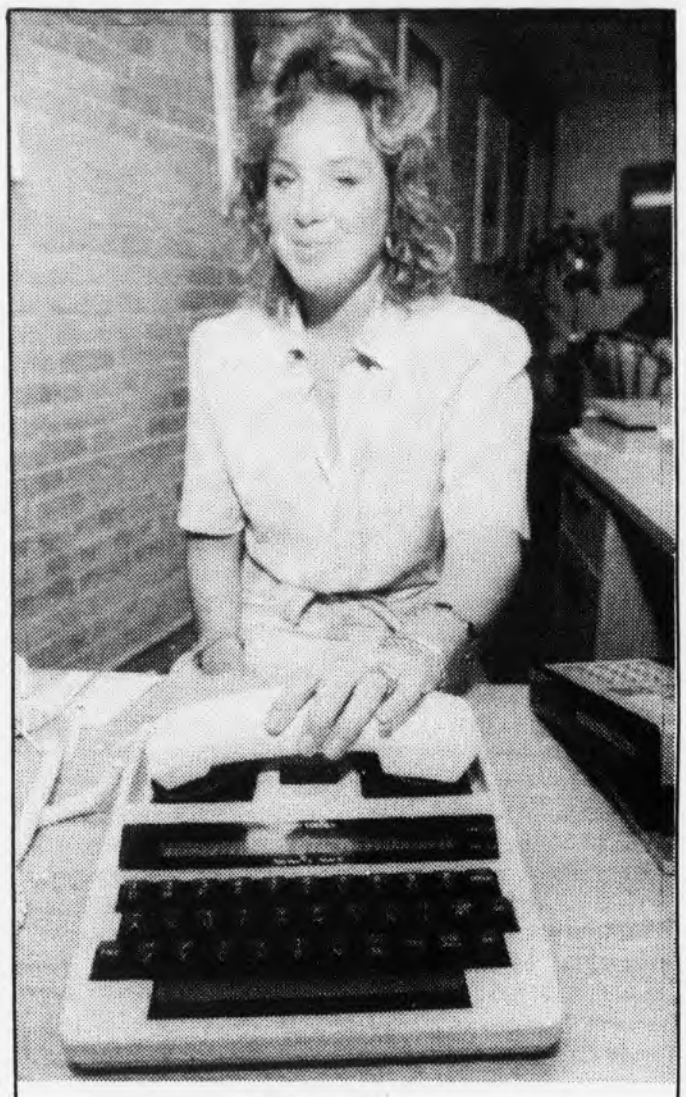
"It's a really good thing; there was never a way that I could call home before this was developed," explained Klien whose parents are both deaf. "It's so simple it's just like typing."

All of the standard services are available on the TTY including calling card numbers, collect calling, and person to person. The phones retail at about $300.

"They are a very good thing to have in case of accidents, there should be one for emergencies in every town," said Klien.

Many hotel chains now have TTYs as well as many police stations. "There is a service called Deaf Contact," explained Klien, "where you can call deaf people on a regular phone and they will transfer your call onto a receiver TTY."

" The whole system makes things much easier for deaf people," said Klien. The TTY is equipped with lights and a high pitched buzzer to alert deaf people of incoming calls.



"It isn't strictly for deaf people, said Klien, "It is great for people with speech impediments or anyone that has trouble talking on the telephone."

Klien explained that many deaf people travel quite frequently. "My parents have traveled all over the world, said Klien. "They tend to do a lot of group things, the deaf community is very tight."

Klien's father is the chairman of a deaf persons' ski and tennis organization. "I went out to Lake Tahoe with my father and about 300 members of the club last fall," said Klien, "we all had a terrific time."

There is a phone book available with all of the current public TTY listings.

"It is great for us to have one on hand at Cohasset Travel," said Klien, Because the deaf community is fairly small and close knit, I know quite a few of them. And they would rather call me than a stranger. I usually have a better understanding of what they might need."

Senior center report . . .

The Dog Days of Summer are upon us! Dog Days, the hottest, most uncomfortable days in August: so called because during that period of time the Dog Star rises and sets with the sun. Dog Star, Sirius, (so called as it lies in the constellation Canis Major), which in ancient times was observed to rise when the days were the hottest.

We need to be very careful during the Dog Days of Summer. As one gets older, your body becomes less able to respond to long exposure to heat. During this long hot, hazy, humid weather, a buildup in body heat can cause heat stroke or heat exhaustion. This is especially true of people who have a history of heart and circulatory disease, stroke, or diabetes.

What are heat-related illnesses? Heat Stroke is a medical emergency requiring immediate attention and treatment by a doctor. Among the symptoms are faintness, dizziness, headache, nausea, loss of consciousness, body temperature of 104°F (40°C) or higher, measured rectally, rapid pulse, and flushed skin.

Heat exhaustion takes longer to develop than other heat-related illnesses. It results from a loss of body water and salt. The symptoms include weakness, heavy sweating, nausea, and giddiness. Heat exhaustion is treated by resting in bed away from the heat and drinking cool liquids.

Protective measures — In hot weather — the best precaution during hot spells is to remain indoors in an air-conditioned room. If your home is not air-conditioned, you might go to a cool public place (like a library, movie theater, or store) during the hottest hours.

Other good ways to cool off include taking cool baths or showers, placing icebags or wet towels on the body, and using fans. In addition, it is wise to: 1. Stay out of direct sunlight and avoid strenuous activity. 2. Wear lightweight, light-colored, loosefitting clothing that permits sweat to evaporate. 3. Drink plenty of liquids such as water, fruit and vegetable juice, and iced tea to replace the fluids lost by sweating. Try not to drink alcoholic beverages or fluids that have too much salt, since salt can complicate existing medical problems, such as high blood pressure. Use salt tablets only with your doctor's approval. Above all, take the heat seriously and don't ignore danger signs like nausea, dizziness, and fatigue.

Caution, common sense, and prompt medical attention can help avoid serious illness due to heat related illnesses. Don't wait. Call for help.

School board refuses to reconsider Supt. Easton

The regional school committee refused last week to reconsider its June 24 decision to not rehire Clifford Easton as the Superintendent of the South Shore Vocational Technical High School, shattering some members' hopes of keeping him at the school.

"We're losing a good man," member John Doyle of Rockland said after the meeting, "and I'm sad about that."

The board voted 4-3 against a motion for reconsideration. Committee members Doyle, Robert Molla of Norwell, Breida McDonough of Scituate, and Walter Easttey of Abington voted not to reconsider, while Lloyd Patriquin, David Chittim of Cohasset, and Dennis Blackwell of Hanover, voted for reconsideration. James McDermott of Hanson, who had voted against rehiring Easton at the June 24 meeting, was not present.

At the meeting four weeks ago, the committee had also voted 4-3 against rehiring Easton when his contract expires next spring. Many committee members at the time cited lack of communication between Easton and the school committee, and low morale among the staff and students as the reasons for not wanting to renew Easton's contract. McDonough was absent from that meeting.

But Patriquin said last week he felt the vote was unfairly taken.

"I really think the action taken at the last meeting was not only unfair to Dr. Easton, but to the districts we represent," he said.

The vote came during an annual evaluation of Easton's performance in which he received high scores. Easton had received overall scores of 157 commendable points, 145 satisfactory points, and only 45 unsatisfactory points. But the discrepancy between the high performance scores and the actual vote to let Easton go has caused concern among committee members and leaves the value of the evaluation process in doubt.

SCOOT is popular with local seniors

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

Adversity often creates hope and encouragement. That is how the Council of Aging and senior center officials feel about their experiences this past month.

Four weeks ago, the Council on Aging's senior shuttle van was extensively damaged in an accident. The repairs were costly and would take about a month to complete, senior center director Kathy Bryanton was told.

"But this group in Cohasset is just so used to going places together, it just didn't seem right that for three weeks they would be deprived."

Sharon Beals, SCOOT Director

In the meantime, they had residents who expected and relied on the convenient transportation for excursions to the supermarket, to their doctors, and to the shopping malls. For a while, Bryanton explained, they used privately-owned cars. But small cars were unable to transport the large number of people accustomed to the senior shuttle service.

Alice Daunt, a former Council on Aging member and now an executive officer of SCOOT, the South Shore Coordinated Transportation agency, suggested an arrangement could be made to use one of their handicapped-accesible vans. Although she didn't anticipate the complexity of completing this transaction, Daunt figured it could be worked out, somehow.

"The Council on Aging met this month to try work this problem out," Bryanton explained. "We soon realized there would be very few options. That's when Alice came forward and helped us. She contacted Sharon Beals, director of SCOOT."

SCOOT is a two-year old organization dedicated to providing transportation for "physically challenged" persons. The four vans provided by SCOOT to neighboring South Shore communities are large vehicles and include space for two to four wheelchairs and as many as ten additional passengers.

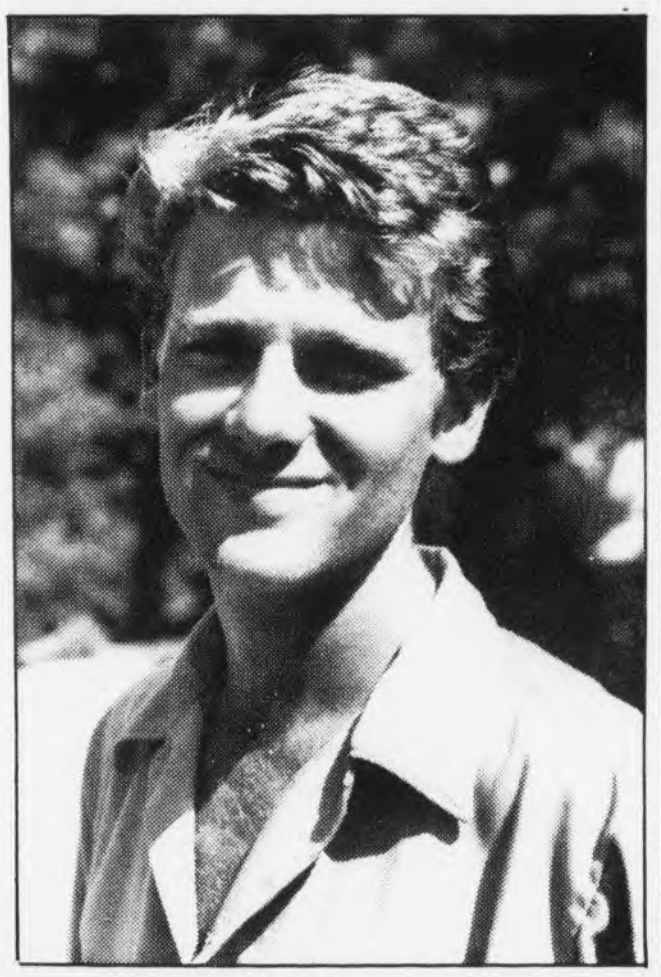
Osborne inherits the harbor

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

A tired, bedraggled, 23 year-old harbormaster looks up from his desk on a hot Tuesday afternoon and you know he is wondering what kind of crisis is going to be walking in the door next.

Steve Osborne officially took control of the harbor last Saturday. He in a sense inherited the harbor from Harry Ritter, the recently retired monarch of Cohasset Harbor.

Presently it is a harbor full of controversy. At least four law suits are now on the books concerning Cohasset Harbor. The alarming number of boats illegally moored in the harbor has finally come to the forefront and the infamous mooring waiting list is still the topic of endless controversy.



"I've been really busy," says Osborne understating the obvious.

Osborne is not new to this area. He graduated from the Norwell High School in 1982. He spent five years in the Navy stationed out of San Diego. After that he lived in Seattle where he was the manager of a dry dock on Lake Union.

Osborne's first official act as harbormaster was to check into the registrations of boats in the harbor where there was some question about the validity of their mooring.

"I checked all the registrations and bounced the names off of those on the official mooring list. I asked the people moored illegally what their intentions were and if they said they intended to stay I informed them

Souppes welcome to return

The families who hosted last month's visitors from our French sister town, individually decided they would definitely repeat the adventure.

The Dean family of Meadow Lane hosted 17 year-old Souppes Sur Loing resident Geraldine Mathiault for three weeks. Geraldine quickly befriended Alida Dean, who is almost 16. Her mother, Mia Dean, said the experience was "excellent for the entire family."

Although initially worried that Geraldine may not "fit in with our menagerie," Mia said the French girl "learned a lot about us very quickly, and we learned a lot about her. It was a positive experience for everyone."

The Dean's had traveled to France and were aware of the differences in mentality and lifestyles. But despite their differences, Geraldine quickly fit into the American household.

Explained Mia, "her parents share the same interests as we have here. We have a huge vegetable garden and Geraldine liked to work in it with me, just like she did at home. She really integrated herself into our way of life."

The first few days after Geraldine's arrival, "we got off to a roaring start," she recalled, taking their guest to the Cape and into Boston. As the days continued, the Dean family decided that Geraldine liked to remain in Cohasset, close to her friends from Souppes.

"In the end," Mia stated, "we didn't want her to go. We loved having her here. She was sensitive, mature and willing to try out her English."

Swimmers drown Scituate . . . dominate league

The Cohasset Swim Team crushed its biggest opponent of the season last Friday, July 31 in a whopping 120 point landslide over Scituate Harbor Yacht Club.

The swim team is a remarkable 4-0, which is amazing considering that Cohasset is one of the only teams in the league that doesn't swim year round.

Eric Karcher and John Jackson have their hands full at the town pool with about 600 people passing through the gate each day. Acting as directors of the swim center and coach of the swim team comes naturally however to these two former lifeguards.

"About 65 percent of our competition swim indoors during the winter," said Jackson. "Only a few of our kids are able to do that.

"The competition has been very good this year," he added. "It's tough to get a big team together because kids have to work and what not in the summer. We're lucky to get all of these kids involved."

The swim team has five divisions by age, under 8, under 10, under 12, 14, and 16. They also sport a diving team.

"This is actually more recreational than a lot of other clubs," explained Jackson. Still each age group prac-

Cohasset's week . . .

License suspended

Selectmen voted unanimously Monday night to suspend the license of Liquors Unlimited in downtown Cohasset for one day for selling alcoholic beverages to a minor.

At the hearing, police officer Richard Yokum testified that he watched a minor, Craig Mattes of South Main Street, enter Liquors Unlimited and purchase a case of beer. Yokum observed this from a perch high above in the St. Stephen's Church parking lot. The minor was then followed down to Sandy Beach where he was immediately arrested. In his possession was a false liquor identification card.

The youth testified that he had not been "I.D.ed" on that occasion but had been on previous occasions at that store.

Theodore Anton, owner of the establishment testified the beer had been sold to Mattes twice that evening. "We are extremely careful," said Anton. "We always ask for I.D. cards. I don't think that we are completely at fault."

The clerk on duty was not present at the hearing, but testified that she had carded the minor in question. Also, according to Anton, she said that he was slightly intoxicated. "If he was in this condition," said Selectmen Rocky Laugelle, "then by no means should she have sold to him no matter what kind of I.D. he had. This is an unfortunate situation."

"There is a big question in my mind about this situation," said Selectman Jim Gallagher, "I'm sorry it happened to you but I'm afraid you are at fault here."

More CHL requirements

The state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) determined last week that several issues must be addressed so that Cohasset Heights Ltd. can continue in operation.

Among the concerns expressed by DEQE is that the site assignment and requirement of a special permit now before the zoning board of appeals be resolved.

The commercial landfill company applied to the DEQE for permission to continue its operation on Crocker Lane, specifically in an area designated as Area Four-A.

DEQE reviewed soil logs and design and construction details relative to the installation of the liner and leachate collection system for Area Four-A and determined: the soil logs indicate the soils are not of a homogeneous consistency for constructing an in-placed impervious liner; the soils proposed for the impoervious liner in Area Four-A do not meet DEQE's current requirement; and the intergrity of the existing soil liner in other areas is questionable.

Among the issues the state wants resolved are: the site assignment and special permit before the Cohasset zoning board. DEQE also stated it will not approve a requested expansion of the CHL facility until a long-term or permanent leachate treatment system has been approved by the state Division of Water Pollution Control. CHL owners John and Paul Barry have proposed a $1.5 million state-of-the-art treatment facility.

The state also noted that more hydrogeologic information is needed to isolate and identify the leachate plume at the site, the direction of flow of the leachate plume, and the installation of additional monitoring wells in the area of Lily Pond. The state wants to be assured that none of the leachate is flowing toward Lily Pond or Great Swamp.

The DEQE has also ordered information on the design, construction, operation and maintenance of a surface water collection system, and the design and construction of a leachate containment system.

No park nuisance

Health Agent Joseph Godzik determined that dust caused by horseriders at Wheelwright Park is not a nuisance or a danger to the public health.

Dr. Godzik responded to a complaint made by Jacqueline Wirth of 14 Red Gate Lane about the dust caused by the riding ring at the park on July 23. "At that time, Mrs. Sally Davenport was giving instructions to two riders. During this schooling, dust was generated into the air," he wrote in a letter to the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE). "While observing the area, I saw a truck drive past the riding ring going into the park then come out.It generated much more dust than the horses."

Dr. Godzik concluded that "the dust stirred up did not constitute a nuisance or a danger to the public health."

Revised timetable

The town hall renovation project architect has completed a revised time schedule which will conclude with construction finished by August, 1988.

According to architect Brett Donham, the project will be advertised for contractor bids this week. Those bids will be due September 21. The contract for construction of the $1 million addition will be awarded October 6, 1987, with completion of the project scheduled for August, 1988.

Correction . . .

Because of a typographical computer error last week, the leading paragraphs in the August 30 Cohasset Mariner regarding lobsterman Herbert Jason were unreadable.

It should have read as follows:

If you are a taxpayer in Cohasset it might be a good idea to ask Herbert Jason of Cushing street why there is a new 36-foot lobster boat in his front yard. The boat is the subject of a one million dollar lawsuit that Jason has filed against the town.

The story, according to Jason, began in 1978 when his grandson, Greg Small, put his name on the waiting list for a mooring in Cohasset Harbor. It was in the spring of 1985 when Jason, "became aware that Harbormaster Harry Ritter had jumped over Greg's name twice." According to Jason, Ritter assigned moorings to Scott Herzog and Joe Barrow, who according to the official mooring list had signed up in 1979 and 1980, respectively.

Selectmans briefs . . .

Harbor roosters out

Don Andrew, executive secretary for the selectmen, announced at Monday's meeting that Harbormaster Harry Ritter has officially retired as of Saturday, August 1.

Steve Osborne, in his first official act as harbormaster, notified 12 boats illegally roosting on vacant moorings in the harbor that if they are not out of the harbor by Wednesday, they will be hauled out. Ten of the 12 pleasure crafts have already exited the harbor. Some new notices for other "roosters" will be going out early next week.

"From now on, everyone that is roosting on an illegal mooring will be treated the same way," said Andrew.

Car sold to high bidder

The Fire Chief's car has been sold. Selectmen announced that the high bidder for the chief's 1980, red, Dodge Diplomat was Pat Walsh of South Main Street. The high bid of $676 outspent the two other bidders by more than $100.

Insurance savings

The insurance committee met with selectmen Monday night and decided to make some changes. Galt Grant explained to the board that the Claims Monitoring Service, a management service for medical plans, will be able to provide a direct savings to the town of $35,000 and a one-time cash flow savings of $65,000.

"The bottom line," said Grant, "is that we will be able to procure a big savings to the town and not increase our liability." The option of insurance is still up to the individual employee.

Chamber gift to town

Cohasset Chamber of Commerce president Dick Straley and vice president Don Staszko presented selectmen with a generous gift of $4000 Monday night.

That was the proceeds from the dinner at Hugo's followed by the showing of The Witches of Eastwick at the Hanover Mall Theatre. The money was presented to selectmen for use in the renovation project on Miliken Field.

"This is a great thing that they have done," said Rocky Laugelle. "It is a very generous action."

Play ball!

Selectmen announced Monday they will be participating in an annual softball extravaganza held in Scituate this Sunday.

Teams from Hingham, Hull, Norwell, Marshfield and Scituate will be participating.

Cohasset's line up already includes such big hitters as Martha Gjesteby, Burt Pratt and Rock Laugelle from the selectmen, as well as Tony Fasciano, Charlie Stover, A.J. Antoine, and Lenny Davis.

Everyone is invited to join the fun. Action starts at 1:30 p.m. at the Scituate softball field near the public library on Branch Street.

Area code change

Beginning Aug. 1, all business and residential customers throughout the 617 area code region will be receiving information in their phone bills about Massachusetts' new area code—508.

New England Telephone will introduce the new area code on July 16, 1988. Greater Boston will retain the 617 area code while areas north, west and south will be served by the new 508 code.

The 413 area code region will be unaffected.

The information package customers are receiving in their bills marks the beginning of an extensive informational campaign about 508. The package will contain a map of the new area code boundary as well as a list of the cities and towns that will be served by the new 617 and 508 regions.

The new area code is being introduced in Eastern Massachusetts because New England Telephone is running out of telephone numbers in the region. Having a second area code in this region will give the company more telephone numbers to assign to customers.

Alternate van a hit with shuttle seniors

Beals explained that two of the vehicles were not in constant use, and although they were willing to allow Cohasset to borrow the vehicle, the extra money it costs to operate the van could have been prohibitive, she said. "The insurance for these vans is $200 a week," she stated. "And we couldn't subsidize that amount for Cohasset. And we certainly didn't expect the council to fund it by themselves.

"But this group in Cohasset (the senior shuttle passengers) are just so used to going places together, it just didn't seem right that for three weeks they would be deprived," Beals added.

Bryanton figured out a budget necessary to support the service and it was approved by the Council and the town. Beals said she was able to do a "little extra fundraising" herself, which helped to make up the difference.

"It really was a pleasure to see we could do it that fast," Beals said. "And what has been even more phenonmenal is to see how many people in wheelchairs are using this service now."

Surveys conducted by the Council on Aging have indicated that during the past year, the shuttle serviced 61 different residents. In the past three weeks alone, the handicapped-accessible van has serviced an additional 50 persons.

"What has happened," Bryanton noted, "is that word spread that SCOOT is now available. And people who never used out shuttle van now are saying, 'let's give this a try.' So now we're finding that just when the Council was faced with cutting back its service, we're expanding instead."

Helen Barbery is one example. She stopped driving a few months ago because of her blurred vision. "I don't know what I would have done without the van," she said. "I thought I didn't drive that much, but once I stopped, did I miss it!"

This past Sunday, the SCOOT van transported several senior residents to the South Shore Music Circus. As Barbery explained, included in the group was one wheelchair-bound man who could not use the shuttle van because it was inaccessible.He was prodded by his family and friends to try out the SCOOT van, and as Barbery said, "it's opened up a whole new world to him. It was wonderful."

A longtime social service worker, Beals said the need for independence is strong in physically - challenged and senior residents. "And even though these people in Cohasset are well loved, there is still an element of need there - the need for independence," she stated. "What they need is the independence to travel to the grocery store, to the doctors - to be with people."

The Scoot van has been a great success, according to: (l to r) Kathy Bryanton, Helen Barberry, driver George Rumney, Alice Daunt and Sharon Beals. (Kathy Perlow)

"That's true," Bryanton echoed. "One woman told me now that she's used the van, she is more independent than ever. Before she had to rely on her family to drive her everywhere. Now she can count on being with her friends and being part of the group on the shuttle."

Beals and Bryanton explained that wheelchair-bound persons are not the only residents who can benefit from the SCOOT van. Blind or vision-impaired seniors, persons with emphysema or other ailments which might inihibit them from participating in activities, can be served by this transportation system.

The volunteer SCOOT drivers are trained in first aid, CPR, and often have completed a defensive driver's course. SCOOT also provides the drivers with a one-day training seminar called Passenger's Assistance Technique Course. This class trains the drivers in dealing with every possible apparatus used by handicapped persons, and how to assist those passengers. The exorbitant insurance, Beals said, covers all liability for drivers to assist the passenger from their doorway to the van.

Because the SCOOT van has been so well-received, Bryanton has applied for a grant with Norwell and Scituate to share a handicapped-accessible van for one part-day per month. This is a start, she explained, and if there is a need to provide more service, "we'll definitely look into that," she promised.

In the meantime, the senior center director is looking for drivers to add to their staff of 70 volunteers. Because additional training is necessary for the handicapped accessible van, Bryanton said she will need drivers willing to complete that training.

"I know there's a need for this type of service in Cohasset," she said. "And because we have had the service available, we know people will use it. If people would just be open to the idea of change, and the idea of this SCOOT van, they'd realize how wonderful this service really is. Everyone who has used the van has said how much they loved it. It's opened up a whole new world to many people who previously felt shut out and isolated. That's what our goal has been all along."

Host families await return of Souppes teens

The only person slightly disturbed throughout Geraldine's stay was the Dean's 14 year-old son. "He was pretty amused by Geraldine," his mother stated. "In the end, he developed a closer rapport with her than his sister did.

"I'm amazed," she continued, "that having four kids, the house wasn't a zoo. Everyone cooperated. We would definitely host again."

The Welz family of Windsor Road hosted Fanny Druet for two weeks. The 13 year-old Souppes resident spent the final two weeks with the James Kirk family.

Eloise "Weezie" Welz described the two weeks as a "delightful experience."

TheWelzes'had the opportunity to meet the Druet family last weekend when they arrived to pick-up their daughter. "They are also very warm people," Welz stated. Her father, who had business in this country, wanted Fanny to become acquainted with daily American life.

"So we got a bike fixed for her, and off she went every day. She was very independent, yet she was cautious about keeping in contact with me at all times," Welz said. "I would love to host another resident of Souppes, but I feel two weeks is enough time. The whole thing was a very enriching and wonderful experience for us all. Hopefully, Ali can be part of a trip to Souppes next summer. She'd enjoy that."

Welz noted there are many similarities between the French teens and their American counterparts. "Fanny really wanted a jean jacket she saw one day at The Gap. But she was being very cautious and decided it was too much money. But as soon as her mother arrived last week, the first place she brought her was to the Hanover Mall. Her mother ended up purchasing the jacket for her. I guess that feeling of love a mother has for her children is universal," Welz commented.

(Kathy Perlow)

The Bieryla family of Old Coach Road served as hosts for two weeks to Carole Pietri. During her visit, Carole celebrated her birthday. Her Cohasset family hosted a party for the Souppes teenager and invited her best friend, Fanny, the Welz's and the Kirks. Her teenaged American and French girlfriends extended the party into a sleep-over.

Nicole Bieryla became "pretty close" friends with Carole. "I was pretty nervous at first," Nicole explained. "But we all were in favor of hosting a Souppes student right from the start. Carole has been my penpal for a while." Throught the Cultural Exchange Committee, a penpal program was established in the high school French classrooms.

"I didn't know what she'd be like," Nicole stated. "I wasn't sure how we'd communicate. But we got alone really well. She was a bit homesick, but she wants me to visit her in Souppes. I would like to, but probably not for two years, until I learn more French."

Nicole accompanied her French friend to the town pool, along with many of the other Souppes teens. In addition to afternoons spent on Sandy Beach, the pair visited the Cape and went shopping in Boston.

"She was fun to have around," Nicole exlained. "But truthfully, after two and a-half weeks, she was a little homesick, and I wanted to have my space again.

"My parents and I agree," she continued. "We'd like to do this again. It really doesn't matter if someone is different. We became good friends. "

Carole's stay in Cohasset was shared between the Bieryla family and the Minnar's of Pine Ridge Road. Betsey Minnar described herself as a "Francophile," and admitted she is obsessed with the French way of life, their culture, food and language. Taught by French nuns as a girl, Minnar said she is fluent in their speech, and used this as an oportunity to brush up on the language.

Her daughter, Corrina, agreed that hosting a Souppes student would be a fun adventure for the summer.

"My daughter is 13 - an age where you have to present activities that are interesting for her to do," her mother explained. "Hosting a student from Souppes has kept my daughter interested and active through the summer."

Like Nicole, Corinna has been a penpal to a Souppes student. "So she was interested in meeting Fanny (her penpal). And as it turned out, Carole is Fanny's best friend," Minnar explained. "She is a charming girl, extraordinarily well-mannered and easy to have as part of your family. She was a lovely representative of her town."

The Minnar family, like all the other host families this summer, have decided to repeat their experience. "I don't think I could host a child for a year, as with some of the educational exchange programs," she stated. "But this was just the right amount of time. The newness didn't wear off. Carole was very easy to have - we really lucked out."

Despite their initial nervousness, everyone communicated well with their French-speaking visitor.

Alida Dean and Geraldine Mathiaut.

"It was a nice exposure for the kids," Minnar said. "And my daughter was able to communicate very easily with Carole.

Even the neighbors took a liking to their guest from Souppes. "They loved her," Minnar said. "She was over to my neighbor's pool all the time. They really took a shining to her."

The two-week stay was a "great experience" for American and Souppes friends, she said. It was an adventure the Minnar family intends to repeat.

Osborne planning on bright future for harbor that their boats would be hauled and stored at their own expense," he said.

So far, Osborne has had a fair percentage of success. "There are only three boats left from my list of 12 and I have the owners word that they will move," said Osborne.

Osborne has some definite plans for the future of the harbor. "I want to continue to make improvements such as more navigational aids, enforcement of boating safety and I plan to adopt a mooring inspection policy," said Osborne.

Osborne explained that the plan for mooring inspection would examine 20 percent of the moorings in the harbor each year so in five years each mooring will be totally accounted for.

Osborne has also placed a new sign in the harbor warning boaters that the regulations of no wake, no water skiing and no swimming in the channel, will be strictly enforced.

"The last thing we want is for somebody to get hurt," added Osborne.

A perennial problem in the harbor is that of beginning sailors crashing into moored boats during their lessons.

"I have had a few complaints about that," admitted Osborne. "I have spoken with a few of the instructors at the clubs and they have been most cooperative in towing the beginners out past the breakwater. If they do hit another boat they have been instructed to report it to this office so an accident report can be filed and the necessary insurance people contacted."

"I think it would be a great idea to dredge in the harbor," said Osborne. "But at this point it is only just being talked about."

Osborne also explained that money appropriated at the last town meeting for a new dock is still available.

"It just isn't enough money for the kind of dock we are looking for, we will use it in the future for getting a dock I'm sure," said Osborne.

"I'm tired. I've been working a lot of hours," said Osborne who has had only three days off since he began June 28. "But, I am happy with the progress being made."

☐ If you are wondering what happened to the skaters that used to be with the Cohasset Winter Gardens, here's the latest. They are now skating at the Rockland Rink under the banner reading Winterland, ISIA. They held their first competition a while ago, and sure did well! The club finished in third place, and is comprised of thirteen skaters at the moment. There are some Cohasset kids that are already making the headlines, and surely deserve mention here . . . Lauren Wood won three golds, in the figure, free style and spotlight; Kara Protulis won a gold in the figures and a silver in the free-style, as well as a bronze in the spotlight; Kim Ward won a silver in the Delta; and, Michelle Buckley won a silver in the free-style. Our congratulations to you all, and here's hoping that your new organization has continued success!

☐ Cohasset had some graduates in the recent ceremony held at Boston University. There were 4, 191 in the class and John J. Santini earned his B.S. in Journalism and Sondra H. Schmidt earned her JD in law.

☐ There is a new fund in memory of Jack Langmaid, called the John F. Landmaid III Memorial Fund. It is being set up to benefit Cohasset students, and the fund will be used to encourage students' participation in and appreciation of music. What better way to be remembered if you were a dedicated man like Jack was. ☐ Richard Redick and Derek Lacks are going great guns in the Youth Tennis Program this summer. They are working for the recreation department. And, it's hard to believe that Eric Karcher is the Cohasset Swim Team coach this year. Seems as though he was just making the headlines himself for his swimming talents, now he's teaching to the grand swim team. Sure is nice to see these guys using their skills to help the youth learn . . .

☐ Hats off to Mary Ellen Neagle, who sure has done herself proud in the real estate world. She is manager of the Cohasset Office of the Jack Conway Company, and is a member of the President's Gold Club of the Company. Takes a lot of work to earn that honor, and she has qualified for international real estate conferences since they began in 1979!

☐ Happy golfing to Harry Ritter, who is retiring as our harbormaster. Harry leaves the helm to hit the links, and we are sure that he'll love every minute of it! Sure will miss seeing him around the harbor, he was a permanent fixture there! Perhaps we will see him some Sunday afternoon on the Pro Tour with Chi Chi Rodriques!

☐ Is there anyone in town that doesn't have bluefish in their freezer? There sure were a slew of them at Rocky Beach recently! Even if you don't like to fish, watching them leap out of the water is a sight to see.

☐ Jim and Lourainne Hoy are in seventh heaven lately! When you see either one of them, ask them to show you the pictures of their grandchildren! They sure are beautiful, John and Cindy did a "good job". They are all going to be here for a visit, the Hoys will be on cloud nine.

☐ Kit and Sue Megathlin sure had reason to celebrate last Saturday, their son Shawn was married. Shawn is planning to continue on to law school in the fall, so they certainly will have a full life. Best wishes to the newlyweds, and to the brand new "in-laws".

☐ Mia Graham is touring Europe as this is being written, we'll bet she'll have tons of news to report upon her return.

☐ Reminder to Seniors . . . the Keep Well Clinic is going to hold two blood pressure screenings in August, one on August 13 in the senior center (11:30-noon), and the other on August 28th in the rec room at 60 Elm from 10:00-noon. The town nurse does the screening, and will help you keep a record of your blood pressure.

☐ That's the news from here, keep yours coming.

Challenges to Constitution

By David Wadsworth
Constitutional Bicentennial Committee Chairman

The Philadelphia Constitutional Convention of 1787 produced one of the most important of our nation's founding documents, a federal Constitution the likes of which had not been seen before.

The American Constitution of 1787 was to become the cornerstone of a new nation and the keystone of a society based upon highest principles of freedom, liberty, and justice under law. The Constitutional Convention itself, consisting of delegates from 12 of the original states, first met in May of 1787. Its primary mission was to "correct certain deficiencies" in the existing Articles of Confederation, our nation's first framework of government, itself dating from 1781. Through summer months of 1787 the Convention discussed, debated and attempted to define the radical changes many felt were necessary if the new and faltering nation were to surmount its increasing problems.

Compromise and agreement came slowly but surely as the Convention struggled to write a Constitutional document that would withstand the challenges and hazards of the future. The half a hundred delegates from the various states who were present at the Philadelphia Convention were men of proven ability and practical experiences. Many had served as leaders of government in their own states before being picked to serve as framers of the new Constitution. Not all agreed upon the subject of political philosophy, some were committed to defend purely regional political and economic systems.

There was a great difference in outlook between, say, the suspicious and reserved Yankees of New England delegations and the aristocratic land owners of southern states. But all were men of high principle, and dedicated to ensuring the survival of their nation. Most were committed to the idea that a strong federal republic would be the best frame of government that could be devised. Importantly, most also believed so strongly in the need for a unified national government that they were quite willing to compromise strongly held beliefs in order to reach an accord acceptable to all.

Through July and into August 1787 the beginnings of the new Constitutional document began to emerge, bit by bit. As the Convention continued, early rough drafts were refined as each facet of proposed new government was examined and re-examined. By early August the Convention's Committee On Detail had written a preliminary draft of a Constitutional document based upon the earlier "Virginia Plan" as amended by delegates over several prior weeks of discussion.

A major hurdle had been overcome through adoption of the "Connecticut Compromise" ensuring adequate representation to small states in the national legislature. Specifics regarding governmental powers and structures being worked out, point by point, in the daily sessions of the Convention.

The proposed roles of Executive, Legislative and Judicial branches of the future government continued to be discussed, as were such matters as qualifications for the various offices and methods of electing public officials. Powers and restrictions upon power, at both state and federal levels, continued to be subjects for inquiry and discussion. The means for amending the Constitution and for admitting additional states also were examined. Little by little, as days and weeks passed, the convention came closer to creating a finished document, a propsoed framework for a new national government, which would be acceptable to all the delegations and could be submitted to ensuing ratification conventions held in each state, with at least a fair chance for success.

Perhaps the final and greatest threat to Convention acceptance of the Constitutional document occurred when delegates found themselves face to face with the issue of slavery, a regional issue hotly defended by their southern colleagues. By mid-August South Carolina's Gen. Charles Cotesworth Pinckney and Massachusetts' Rufus King had collided over the issues, and the tempers of many delegates had begun to wear this. Strongly worded speeches both favorable to and st ongly opposed to slavery echoed through Independence Hall, and when the dust settled, the second "Great Compromise" of the Convention permitted orderly work to resume. The Constitution would not prohibit slavery immediately, but would permit taxes to

New era in harbor

Cohasset Harbor is a beautiful mess.

To the casual observer, the harbor is a sea of tranquility, a calm inlet where hearty fishing boats dock alongside beautiful pleasure craft. Sailboats wind in and out of the narrow mouth, dodging other vessels as they pass by.

What that innocent observation doesn't relate is all the bickering and back-stabbing that has been going on for years.

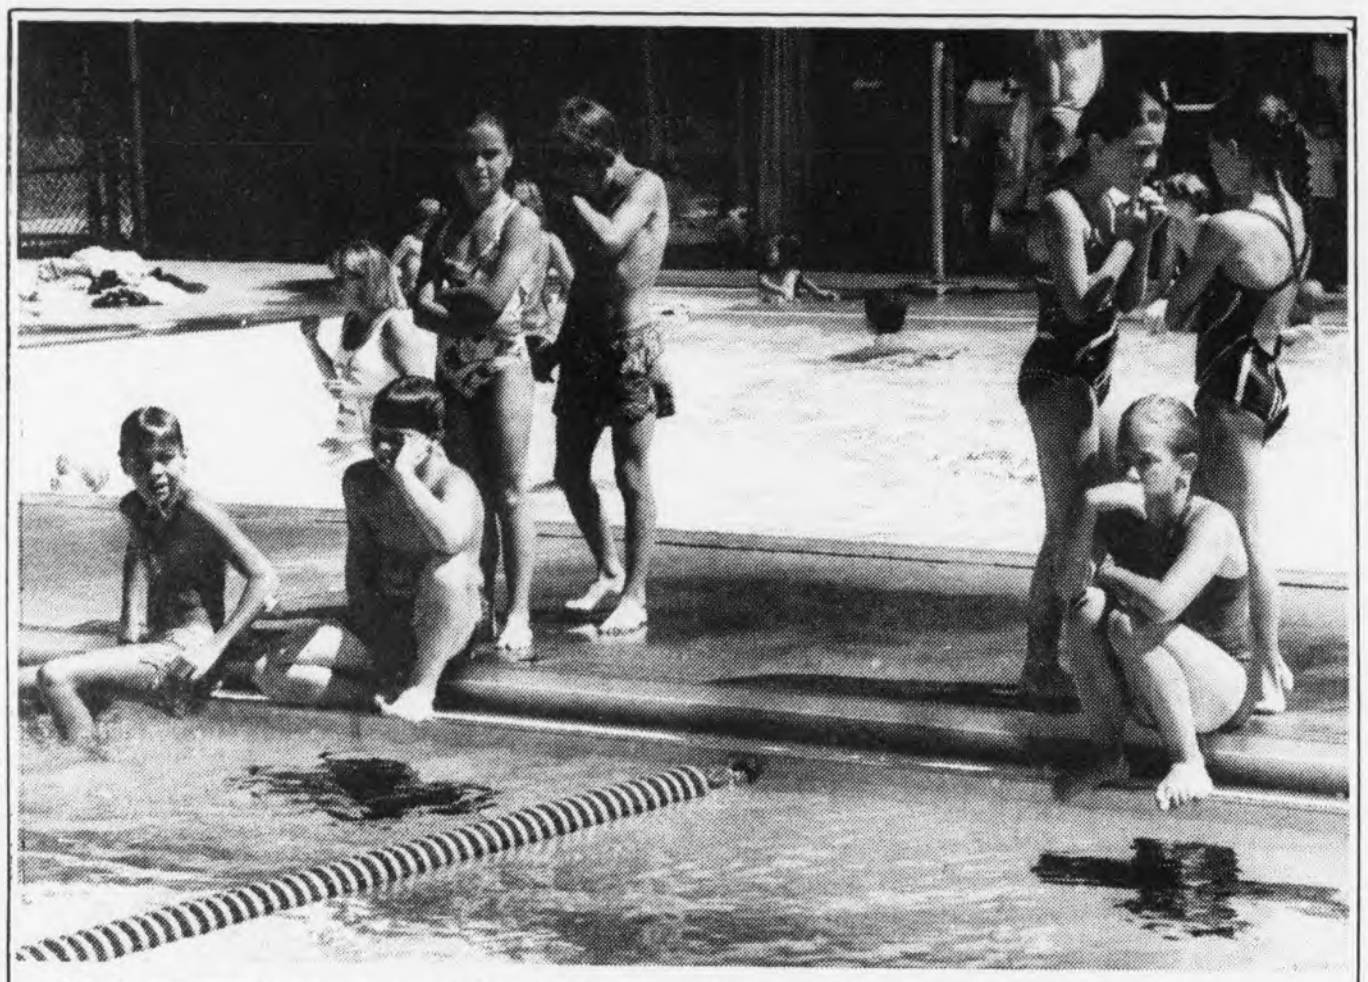
Commercial fishermen say the mooring list is operated in an unfair and arbitrary manner. Many of them have been barred from the harbor until the matter is resolved in court. Another local lobsterman is suing the town, saying he has been illegally denied a mooring space in the harbor. And the town is tied up in a long legal battle against another local resident who intends to build additional floats along Bailey's Creek.

All these problems are certainly not the fault of one harbormaster, one town official or one angry fisherman.

And they certainly won't disappear now with a new harbormaster at the helm. Many residents and fishermen are anxious to begin anew with harbormaster Steven Osborne. But he can not be the cure for everything that ails our tiny harbor.

Just as the previous harbormaster, Harry Ritter, was surely not responsible for all the problems and confusion there, Osborne can not single-handedly solve all the tension and disagreements.

But perhaps with a new harbormaster on board - particularly someone with no previous connections to the town - fishermen, mooring holders and would-be-mooring holders will come together in a spirit of new cooperation.



Lawsuits are not the only way to resolve serious problems. There has to be increased communication between the harbormaster, selectmen, the harbor study committee and the residents who use this harbor for their livlihood and their leisure time.

The fishermen and lobstermen of Cohasset Harbor, men who have inherited their way of life from generations before them, deserve immediate attention and first consideration. It is a tough life, and mooring restrictions and lack of communication will affect them most seriously.

The town must work immediately to resolve the disputes that have landed at least seven of these commercial fishermen onto drydock, and into the courtroom. That is not where they belong.

The harbor study committee, a group of hard-working volunteers, must force themselves to be heard - by selectmen and the new harbormaster. They are knowledgeable and they are tuned into what weekend boaters and lifelong seamen need from their harbor. Town officials must begin to listen more closely and respond to these needs.

This week brings a new era into Cohasset Harbor. A new harbormaster has taken the reins. We hope he has arrived with a willingness to listen, and an ability to find solutions to some lingering, serious problems.

Local swimmers hang out around the popular summertime spot, the town pool. (Kathy Perlow)

What happened at stop sign?

Letters

To the Editor:

I am 16 years old. Up until now I have always trusted and looked up to the policemen and women in my town. On July 18 of this year I was driving my car down Elm Street (the street the Police Station is located on), while an oncoming car approached a stop sign less than one hundred yards ahead of me. Since practically no one in town bothers to stop at this stop sign I thought that I had better slow down. Yet right behind this car a police car pulled up so I thought surely both cars would stop. To my surprise, the car in front of the police car, the police car itself, and a Bronco following the police car all continued through the stop sign without giving me a second look. By this time I was at a complete stop, and the Bronco following the police car had to swerve around me quickly so that it would not hit my car. I looked through my rear view mirror, and the police car was just continuing down the road as if nothing had ever happened. I was appalled at the whole matter to say the least. I mean, how could the police car not even bother to obey the laws of its own town?

I was so mad that I went to the police station to complain, or at least try to find out if there could possibly be an explanation for what happened. After I had explained the situation and pointed out that the three cars not only flagrantly disobeyed the law, but put myself and my car in a position of danger when I clearly had the right of way, they gave me a poor excuse. The officer behind the wheel told me that the Bronco was following her because there was an injured person in the back, and they were on the way to the fire station. However, this excuse does not explain why there was no action taken on the first car. Also, if it was such an emergency that they had to run through the stop sign, where were the lights, sirens, or ambulance?

I realize that this sort of thing happens virtually every day, where people do not always bother to stop at stop signs. However, I find it quite irritating that the main car involved was a police car serving my own town. If the officers purpose was to help save an injured person, then it'squite ironic that the officer put me in a position of danger.

Sincerely,
Jen Coley

Landfill opponents not hippies

To the Editor:

One of the most disturbing things about the Cohasset Height's Landfill fight is the comments of a small number of residents around town. They seem to think that those who want C.H.L. shut are nothing but a bunch of hippies. Can you imagine?

Wouldn't that be something if the only people in Cohasset, who cared about children's and adults health, property values, water costs, and the integrity of town hall politics were hippies.

Fortunately, there is broad based support in this community for the closure and cleanup of this mess next to Whitney Woods and 1 1/4 mile uphill from Lily Pond. Over 700 people in town have so far signed a petition opposing expansion of this landfill. The number continues to rise. Yes, the vast majority of citizens of Cohasset want that dump closed and cleaned up. Some feel frustration that engineering studies and legal advice contracted by the town have failed to provide the solutions many of us want. The fact of the matter is that lawyers and engineers make more money off the problem, than off the solution. If you want proof that the landfill is damaging Lily Pond, you might as well wait until your tap water smells like leachate.

On the other hand, if you want to see the town do something about this dump, you will join with the concerned citizens of Cohasset and take action against this cancer in our community. Nobody else can take your place.

Gilman urges safe driving

(This letter was sent to Polly Doggett from former Hingham Mariner editor Judy Gilman, still recovering from a car accident of 1985, and at a residence in Hyannis, Mass.)

To The Editor:

Congratulations! That was a very nice letter you wrote to the Mariners about the stupidity of drinking and driving.

The cars going along South Street here travel so fast it's just unbelievable! And I realize that most of the clients here were driving cars when they had accidents. And what do they want now? For the most part, a "really souped-up car that will zip along." God help us all then!

My love,
Judy Gilman

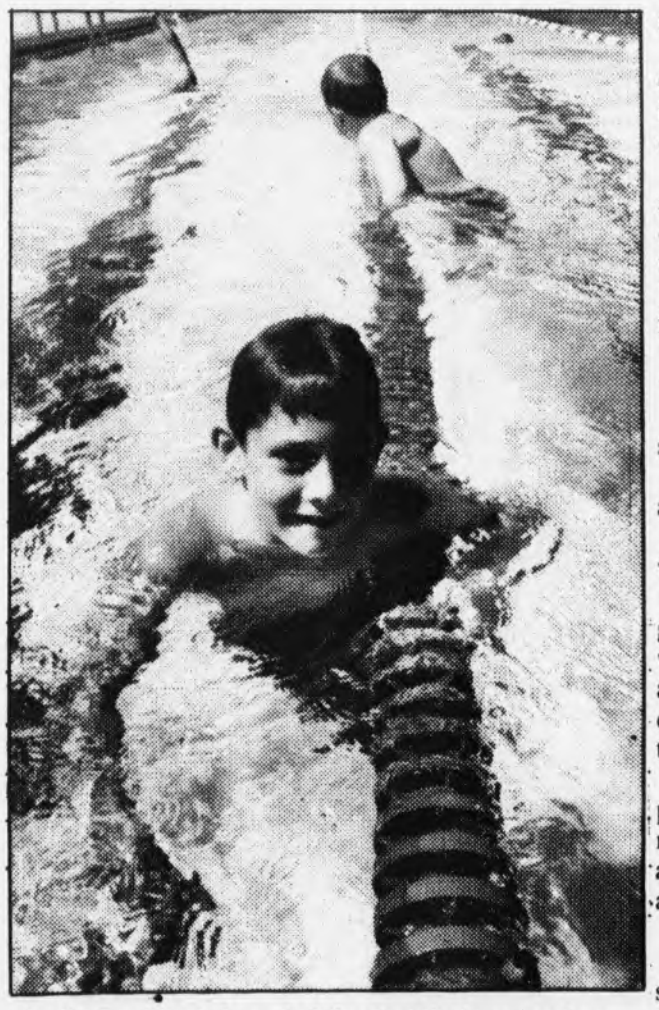
tices for an hour every morning rain or shine. The swim team has six meets during the summer and then a final tournament series.

The directors cite some of the all stars as John deLima and Jenifer Jackson in the 14 and under catagory, 16 and unders, Amy Hobbs and Sarah Bishop, 12 and under, Becky Golden and Robin Devito and 8 and under, Lauren Devito.

"When we were guarding last year we noticed a problem," said Jackson. "What we tried tc do this year is boost up the spirit and we suceeded.

"We try to give everyone a chance to swim," said Jackson. "Some of our 8 and unders are just incredible." Kevin Haydn and Maren Cameron are doing great. When we picked them up in the beginning of the summer they couldn't really swim that well. Now they are contributing.



"Lots of parents show up for the meets," said Jackson. "It's lots of fun for the kids."

The pool has a staff of five lifeguards; Katie Anderson, Jeannine Buckley, Kathleen Buckley, Alicia Kelly and Erin Canavan.

"We haven't had any problems at all except for a few presents left by pool hoppers," said Jackson.

"It's a haven for kids here," said Michelle Massa, a chipper desk clerk at the pool. "It's great though, it keeps the kids off the mean streets of Cohasset."

"The kids are terriffic," said Karcher. "If we ask something of the kids they'll do it. In Duxbury we were down by 10 points before the relays. We had a mini meeting and told them that all we asked was not that they win, only that they gave it their best shot. They came through and we won by two points. It was a rewarding way to start off this season."

Justin Buckley takes a brief rest at the lane marker.

An average swim meet is a major event. Ther are 61 events plus the diving competition. Swimmers compete in backstroke, freestyle, breast stroke, butterfly, individual and team medleys.

"The boys and girls 16 and under medley relays are always the last events of the day," said Jackson, "We count on them when it is crunch time. In Duxbury when the boys were behind they just did it. Matt Buckley was just a renegade breast stroker. He turned a fifteen meter deficit into a fifteen meter lead."

Swim meet days at the town pool come complete with flags,banners, starting blocks and lane markers.

"The 10 and unders are the heart of our team spirit," said Jackson "The girls are just about unbeatable."

Karcher and Jackson both teach swimming lessons at the pool.

"There is so much going on you wouldn't believe it," voiced Massa.

The town pool also sponsors a Water Babies program for parents to adjust their children to the water at a very early age. There are adult swim lessons, advanced life saving classes and Adapted Aquatics designed for the person who has difficulty learning how to swim.

There is also a special needs program that makes the pool accessible with the use of a hoyer lift. Also the recreation department brings campers for a swim on alternating days. "It's standing room only when they are around," joked Karcher.

Both Karcher and Jackson are content.

"We are impressed that we are the last big all-summer swim team" Karcher commented. "The fact that we are doing so well really says something about the kids."

It's happening...

Family story hours

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library invites school-age children and their parents to a Family Story Hour on Monday, August 10 at 7:30 p.m. This is the last in a series of five evening programs for family enjoyment.

Joan Gatturna will appear in traditional 17th century English costume to perform a program of English folktales. Her stories will include "The Two Sisters," an ancient tale told through the centuries as a story as well as a ballad. This particular telling will combine both story and song, and the audience will be asked to participate. Gatturna will also tell "The Three Sillies" and "The White-faced Simony."

Gatturna has been a Children's Librarian in the Boston Public Library system. She has also worked as a School Media Specialist both in Duxbury and here, in Cohasset.

She presently performs with the New English Song and Daunce Companie, with which she has travelled throughout New England to present a program of 17th century pasttimes of England and New England for schools, festivals, museums and private parties. These pasttimes include song, dance, games and storytelling. Gatturna's program will last about 45 minutes.

Walking tour a success

The Cohasset Historical Society's special walking tour of the town common and its environs was held last Saturday. Nearly twenty-five hardy history enthusiasts braved temperatures hovering in the mid-90's to hear John Cole, architectural historian and preservation consultant, talk about the several unique architectural styles represented by the homes and buildings lining Cohasset's historic Common.

The earliest Colonial home near the town common is the Joseph Bates House of 1713, a high-style early Georgian dwelling containing many features original to its construction, carefully preserved. The summer walking tour visited the Joseph Bates House and viewed its interior, as well as the fine and well documented 1842 barn near the house.

From there the Society's tour went the length of the common, and heard Cole describe important architectural features of Cohasset houses, spanning a century and a half of changing architectural styles, which line the edges of the town's green. Pre-Revolutionary Georgian, Federal, Greek Revival and Italianate Victorian styles are found along North Main Street and Highland Avenue, representing the growth of the town through the several great eras of American architecture.

The Colonial Meeting House on the Common, unique among early New England church buildings, was singled out by Mr. Cole as being a building of the highest order of importance for both historical and architectural reasons. The proximity of different architectural styles, sometimes combined in the same structure, make Cohasset's Town Common and its environs a fascinating study in the evolution of this traditional New England village. The walking tour ended at the Society's Maritime Museum, where Society President Charles Fink reported upon the current project being undertaken by the U.S. Coast Guard to reconstruct damaged upper parts of Minot's Ledge Lighthouse, a major repair that sees the light temporarily extinguished while new granite blocks are being cut to replace damaged sections of the tower. When the extensive renovation is completed the 130 year old lighthouse will appear the same as it has since its completion in 1860. Thus, in presenting facts and views of the town's characteristic architecture and then its famous lighthouse, the Historical Society's walking tour touched upon two of Cohasset's most important historical assets.

NEWS OF THE PARISH:

Turning our attention toward next year's theme of "Expanding Circles," the planning meeting of June 25 concluded with assigning the various needs to boards and committees for study and program recommendations to be reported to the October meeting of the Church Committee.

To the new Youth Task Force (to-be-organized at the September meeting of the Church Committee), was assigned the following: Youth fellowship, to be fun, interesting and meaningful; Possibility of a town-wide youth fellowship, sharing the cost of a youth director with other churches in Cohasset; Youth retreats, overnights, campouts, work camp experience; Youth struggles; what are they, raising adult awareness and suggesting ways we might respond.

The Deacons' assignments included: More "get togethers," getting acquainted and sharing; More attention to the elderly; More tapping into denominational resources; Define and increase outreach, local, national and off shore.

A joint committee to be formed with representatives of the Deacons and Board of Christian Education will be asked to consider plans for: Further adult religious education programs; Young adult get togethers; A prayer group and prayer chain; Adult overnight retreats.

The Board of Christian Education along with the new music director and the minister will consider establishing children's choir, and the implementation of Church School curriculum in the nursery class.

The Trustees have been asked to look into refurbishing the balcony (carpet, pew cushions and paint) and carpeting for the main floor (sanctuary) side aisles.

The Finance Committee will be looking into: Placing the financial records into a church computer program; Establishing and organizing the budgetary process; Increasing the level of stewardship among members.

The minister is charged to help out with all of the above concerns, work for closer ecumenism (Cohasset churches working together), and preach relevant sermons(!).

THE NEW COMPUTER has arrived. Muriel, Frank and Gary are busy trying to learn its many faceted functions! Newsletters and bulletins should soon begin to come forth from its printer! The word processing program being used is WordPerfect. The Church Administration programs are still under investigation.

VACATION SCHEDULE: The Rittses departed for Ohio and other parts on July 27 and will return late on August 9. Muriel will check the phone messages regularly and asks that you feel free to contact her directly for emergencies and needed sick calls. Rev. Alan Copithorne of Scituate has agreed to be "on call" for special visitation.

WE MOURN with compassion the passing of Grace Bowser, remembering in prayer her family and friends.

FOR THE COMING WEEKS:

Sunday, August 9, 8 a.m., Informal worship, sailing club. 10 a.m., Regular worship, Peter Guild preaching. Monday, August 10, Rittses return from vacation; Sunday, August 16, 8 a.m., Informal worship, sailing club; 10 a.m., Regular worship, "Reciprocal Forgiveness."

St. Stephen's schedule

ADULT EDUCATION CELEBRATES FAMILY —
The Adult Education Committee plans its first course this fall on the family, beginning Sunday, Sept. 27. How do we as a church support families? What are the traits of a strong family? What are some ways of handling the family pressures we all face? These questions and more will be addressed in a warm and caring way for whatever stage family you are in — young couple, school age, empty nest, retirement.
Save Sunday, Sept 27, to begin our Celebration of the Family!
FUTURE DATES — Outreach Committee: Sunday, Aug. 23. Intercessory Prayer Group: Sunday, Aug. 30. Parish Picnic: Sunday, Sept. 20.
Save these dates. All three events are open to all and take place after church. The picnic will once again take place at the Wakeman home.
LEARNING CENTER STARTS REMODELING
The Mary-Martha Learning Center at 1045 Main St., Hingham, has begun remodeling and renovation work aimed at occupancy by Sept. 1. The MMLC will assist young, needy mothers and their children as they struggle to get on their feet. A strong educational component, advocacy, child care and "how to" training services will be offered to the clients, who will live in the safe and caring environment of the MMLC for periods of 3-6 months.
The Center has been strongly supported by the Vestry of St. Stephen's through a financial gift from the church's endowment outreach fund.
If you are interested in learning more about the MMLC, and/or contributing to this exciting new venture, please call John Seavey at 383-1782 or Angus May at 383-6074.
LECTURE BY ELIE WIESEL —
The Rev. Jep Streit, Chaplain at Boston University, is inviting members of St. Stephen's to his home for "light repast and scintillating conversation" at 5 p.m. on Monday, Sept. 14.
At 5:45 p.m. we will leave to hear a lecture by renowned Jewish theologian Elie Wiesel at Boston University. He will speak on a story from Hebrew Scripture.
You may arrive from work (see the Rector for directions) or leave from St. Stephen's at 4 p.m. Call the church office if you plan to attend so that we can give a count.
WALK FOR ALL LIFE COMES TO COHASSET
A walk for peace beginning in Leverett, Maine, will pass through Cohasset on August 20. The three churches on the Common have offered to act as hosts for them that night. The walk is endorsed by the Mass. Conference of the United Church of Christ. A speaker will address the concerns of peace that night.

From the Garden . . .

By Joan Pinkham
Mariner correspondent

August, with its Sturgeon Moon, brings ripening corn, early goldenrod, wild asters, cardinal flowers and much to do in the garden.

The sun sets almost an hour earlier than in June, but there's still time to dig potatoes, thin the carrots, sow more brussel sprouts and, as you wander through the garden, pick off dead blossoms.

Long glistening days, or those that are hot, muggy and buggy, compete with each other in a typical New England August. Moonlit nights include skies that provide a backdrop for showers of bright meteors and shooting stars.

It's a good time to start perennials from seed, and if you want an early show of pansies next spring, choose a lightly shaded location and prepare a seed bed. Keep the seeds and seedlings watered to keep them growing. The trick is to have stocky plants by the time cold weather sets in.

Then, at the first sign of spring, your pansies should be ready to bloom when the cool, sunny weather also has tulips and daffodils to brighten winter-weary souls.

Cool, clear water is what all birds want on a hot summer day, and they appreciate anything that drips, squirts, sprays, runs or holds fresh water. The bird bath should be placed near a tree or bush where they can preen themselves after bathing or seek refuge from the neighbor's cat.

Slavery not dealt with in document

be levied upon the importation of slaves until such time in the future as stronger measures were to be authorized. The compromise appeared barely acceptable to both sides of the debate, but it was enough to save the day, and the Convention. Under its provisions the importation of slaves would cease in the year 1800, but as for the American Constitution as originally written, the institution of slavery itself was scarcely dealt with, and certainly not outlawed. That was the price which must be paid to prevent a fragmenting of the Convention and consequent collapse of the drive to form a national union.

If no one was happy with the results of the slavery compromise, at least most delegates must have been relieved to have successfully surmounted the most dangerous threat encountered by the Convention during the time of its deliberations. However, in leaving the issue of slavery incompletely solved, the Constitutional Convention of 1787, certainly without ever intending to, left the door ajar for future conflict which many Americans would believe has not yet ceased.

In general, however, most would judge that the benefits given to a new nation and its citizens present and future outweighed the unavoidable flaw produced by the need to compromise upon one issue. And within the Constitution itself rested the means of redress which would be successfully used by Americans of later generations.

Town will miss Music Circus 20-yr producer

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

Like the first robin perched atop the frozen landscape, the arrival of Ron Rawson into Cohasset has been an unfailing sign of spring.

But times are a'changin' for this town as the Music Circus producer has decided this season will be his last. The man who is credited with single-handedly making this summer theatre into a money-maker, has said the curtain will fall after this year's final performance.

"I have said, there's a time to come and a time to go, and this is the right time for me to leave," the 67 year-old executive stated this week. "It's nothing more sinister than that - the time was right for a transfusion at the Music Circus."

In his place will be Edward Kasses, 38, a New York talent agent with years of experience in summer theatre production at the Westbury Music Fair.

Lean and tall, the white-haired showman has been a fixture at the Sohier Street tent theatre and throughout town for the past 20 years. When he arrived here in 1967, the Music Circus was, in everyone's collective opinion, a financial disaster. After a single disappointing season, Rawson brought the theatre around full swing.

"They had fallen on hard times here," he admitted. "And they were prepared to close. But we were

Harbor Committee sets priorities

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

The harbor committee met last week to, as Chairman John Pfaffman put it, "establish a consensus and list some priorities."

The board unanimously voted, with Mary Muncey abstaining, to recommend a fee of $10 be charged for dinghy tie ups at town wharfs.

"You have to bring order to this chaos," said Pfaffman.

"Fishermen are the number one concern in this respect," he said, referring to the often crowded and confused situation on town docks that sometimes finds a swamped dinghy chained tightly to an already over-crowded dock.

"I don't think that the fishermen who have been working this harbor should have to pay," said Jack Silvia, a 53-year veteran of Cohasset's lobster trade.

"I don't know if I see the use of a fee," said Muncey. The question of imposing a dinghy tax has been brought up and dismissed for lack of support by other town boards before the emergence of the harbor committee.

Decals will be issued for each boat by the harbor-master. The possibility of using the money received from the dinghy tax to help finance a new town wharf was discussed.

Harbormaster Steve Osborne suggested that a concrete dock be purchased.

"A concrete dock will be cheaper and easier to maintain in the long run," said Osborne.

The price for this dock would be $9,775. "It would be a modular construction, like legos, so we could add on to it if we wanted to," said Pfaffman.

A question still existed with the harbor committee as to whether or not former Harbormaster Harry Ritter had already contracted for a dock with money made available to him at the last town meeting.

A dock subcommittee is being formed to present a proposal to town meeting.

In other business Steve Osborne asked the committee for more funds for his harbor staff.

Exercise course for seniors

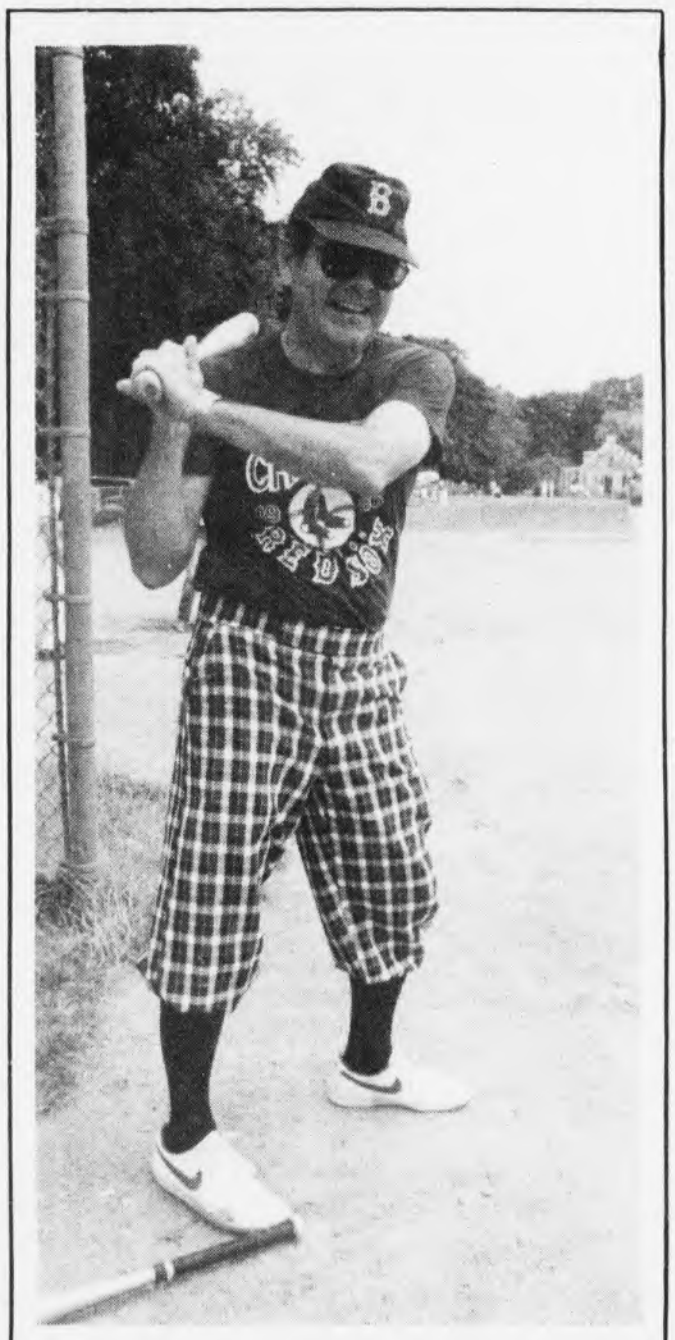
If youthful enthusiasm is contagious, Cohasset seniors will be doing some fancy footwork this fall.

Twenty-six year-old Clare Gurnett, a compact bundle of energy and experience, will be teaching a class in motor development therapy at the senior center.

"Senior citizens have so much to give," she explained. "They all share a little bit of themselves with me. I've learned so much from them - they're so worldly. These are people I'd never have the opportunity to meet otherwise.

"I don't want to sound conceited," she added. "But once I enter the room and begin the program, everyone is so excited to see me."

Beginning in October, Gurnett will begin the hour-long class every Thursday morning.



All seniors with movement impairment, and all handicapped residents regardless of age, are invited to participate. As part of this new class, the SCOOT van, the handicapped-accessible vehicle, will be available to transport residents from their home to the senior center at the Cohasset Community Center.

Residents from Norwell, Scituate and Cohasset nursing homes will also be invited to join the morning exercise class.

Gurnett is a graduate of Bridgewater State College with a degree in physical education. She concentrated in motor development therapy and minored in psychology. In Feburary, 1986, she approached senior center director Kathy Bryanton with the notion of beginning a line dancing or exercise program for the Cohasset seniors. That was already taking place, Gurnett recalled, but Bryanton held onto her resume.

Once Bryanton obtained a grant for the SCOOT van for use this fall in Cohasset and neighboring towns, she also decided it would be a proper time to begin a program "that would pull people from their homes into the community center," Gurnett said, explaining that

Cohasset's week . . .

School committee meetings

The school committee will meet at the following times: September, Tuesday, September 8 at 1:30 p.m., and Monday, September 21; October, Monday, October 5, and Monday, October 19; November, Monday, November 2, and Monday, November 16; December, Monday, December 7.

January, 1988, Monday, January 4, and Tuesday, January 19; February, Monday, February 1, and Monday, February 22; March, Monday, March 7, and Monday, March 21; April, Monday, April 11; May, Monday, May 2, and Monday, May 16; June, Monday, June 6, and Monday, June 20.

At a later date, the committee will determine a schedule for special meetings during budget preparation.

Window installation

The renovation and installation of windows at the high school should be completed by January 20.

Supt. Stephen Hart reported to the school committee Monday night that the project is beginning and bids will be received. The school building committee will have to decide on the type of window to be installed, he said, and depending on the bids received, the project should be completed by Janaury 20. He expected much of the work will be completed during the Christmas vacation.

Supt. Hart explained the work will be done with a minimal disruption to the classrooms. The first floor which includes the computer-conference room, the guidance and nurse's offices and the AV studio will be completed first. "Then we hope the second floor will be done when the students are out. We're trying for a schedule for Christmas time," he explained.

The superintendent also noted they will apply for state grant money for the project under the school building assistance program.

Free school facilities

The proposed school facilities utilization policy is now posted in the Paul Pratt library for public comment.

According to Supt. Stephen Hart, there has been some updating and revision of the regulations within that policy which allows use of the school facilities by community organizations.

Under the proposed regulations, no organized Cohasset youth group or the Cohasset PSO will be charged for use of the facilities. And groups who do not make prompt remittance for use of school facilities cannot use the building again until payment is made. Use of the school buildings is granted upon receipt of a written application. The applications are available at the superintendent's or the assistant superintendent's office.

The school committee will vote on the policy at their next scheduled meeting, Sept. 8.

Bus and lift purchase

The school committee voted Monday night to purchase a 1987 mid-sized bus equipped with a hydraulic lift and equipment for two wheelchairs. The bus will cost $21,950, according to Assistant Supt. Richard Streeter.

He explained that $18,800 remains from the $62,000 town meeting authorized for the purchase of two buses, one of which was recently bought. Streeter said a $3,000 transfer will be needed to purchase the specially-equipped bus.

Afternoon meeting

The next meeting of the school committee will be Sept. 8 at 1:30 p.m. The meeting will immediately follow the annual welcome-back luncheon for the Cohasset teachers.

At this week's meeting, Chairman Joseph Nedrow asked for a moment of silence in memory of former member Jack Langmaid. Langmaid was a member of the committe for nine years. "He was a real key guy to this committee," Nedrow stated.

Slow down on King

Still concerned about the heavy traffic conditions on King Street, residents there again asked selectmen what action has been taken to alleviate the problem.

William Matteson of 293 King Street wrote another letter to selectmen July 31, noting that several weeks have elapsed since they requested assistance from selectmen.

At that time, selectmen said they would talk with town counsel and the police chief before taking any recommended action. Matteson's letter re-emphasized the requests made by the 35 to 40 families on that street. They include: reduce speeding by daily police patrols at various times; excluding all trucks from Rte. 3A to Beechwood Street with signs at both ends, and speed limit signs.

Matteson stated in his letter, "We feel that speed reduction and through truck exclusion would have no bearing on the addition of the planned supermarket and we implore you not to tarry any longer."

Policy on illegal vessels

WHEREAS, Massachusetts General Laws Chapter 102, Section 24 authorizes the Harbormaster to cause the removal of any vessel which lies in his Harbor and which was not moved when directed by him; and

WHEREAS, Massachusetts General Laws Chapter 102, Section 21 authorizes the Harbormaster to adopt regulations concerning the anchorage and location of vessels within the Harbor.

NOW, THEREFORE, pursuant to the above referenced statutes, the Harbormaster of the Town of Cohasset hereby adopts the following policy with regard to the removal of vessels which are improperly moored within the confines of Cohasset Harbor:

1. The Harbormaster shall verify the ownership of any vessel which he suspects is improperly moored within Cohasset Harbor.

2. If the owner of the vessel has not been properly assigned to the mooring to which his vessel is attached, the Harbormaster shall attempt to contact the owner of the vessel by telephone if possible, shall send a letter to the vessel's owner at the address appearing in the vessel registration records and shall post a notice on the vessel itself. The notice shall direct the owner of the vessel to remove the vessel from the confines of Cohasset Harbor within seventy-two (72) hours from the date and time of the notice. Not withstanding the foregoing, if the Harbormaster, in his discretion, determines that an emergency exists which requires immediate removal of the vessel or if the holder of the permit for the mooring in question wishes to immediately use the mooring, then the Harbormaster may direct that the boat be removed from the Harbor forthwith and then he shall attempt to contact the vessel owner and inform him of the vessel's removal.

3. Upon removal of the vessel, the Harbormaster shall inform the Cohasset Police Department that the vessel has been removed.

Residents oppose condos

Two residents of Hull Street have filed suit against the zoning board of appeals, requesting the court annul the board's recent decision to approve a cluster development off Lambert's Lane.

John and Elaine Smoot of 175 Hull Street filed the complaint last week in which they state the zoning board erred in its decision which allows developer Charles B. Wills to construct 31 condominium units on 52 acres of land.

The developer agreed to a request by the planning board to construct three units of "affordable housing" within the cluster development. One additional lot will be deeded to the town as a proposed site for a facility for the mentally retarded, at a below - market cost.

According to the complaint filed by the Smoots, the zoning board failed to make the necessary findings required by state statute, noting that the board never outlined what "substantial hardship" Wills will suffer if the zoning bylaw is enforced without a variance. The lawsuit also claims that Wills failed to meet any of the variance requirements which are specifically set forth by state statute.

According to the complaint, "the access road to the proposed cluster development is a paved narrow private road. Although the entire road is unsafe, one spot is particularly dangerous. The tremendous increase in traffic caused by the building of a cluster development of the size proposed increases the likelihood of a serious accident."

The 52 acres of land are separated by a road designated as Frederic Cunningham Road. According to the findings of the zoning board, the road has not historically been used as such. The property, according to the board, lies partly within RB and RC zoning districts. Wills proposed to build the three units in the RB portion with the RC district dedicated to common open space.

Because the parcels are not contiguous they cannot according to local bylaw, be used as a cluster development. Wills sought a variance from that bylaw.

A second variance was requested by the developer so he could place the development within district RB, and the less restrictive requirements of that district would be applicable. Under the plan approved by the zoning board, the open space will be available for use by all residents in the subdivision, and also for a common septic system and leaching field.

In its decision, the zoning board stated," Owing to circumstances relating to the shape of the property and the soil conditions and especially affecting such land, but not affecting generally the zoning district in which it is located, a literal enforcement of the provisions of said Section would involve substantial hardship to the petitioner and that desirable relief may be granted to the petitioner without substantial detriment to the public good and without nullifying or substantially derogating from the intent or purpose of such by-Law."

Town hall concerns

The town government structure committee has requested that all town department heads, and board and committee chairmen outline their concerns about the functions or inadequacies of town government.

Chairman John O'Donnell Jr. explained the committee is interested in completing a survey and obtaining information concerning the difficulties or inadequacies that currently exist in town government.

He suggested that after members of each department and committee have considered the request, any comments or recommendations be forwarded to the town government structure committee. He stated, "We would appreciate receiving any comments, recommendations or other information that would necessitate changes for improving the structure or functions of your particular organization."

Residents will miss Rawson's presence...

determined to keep it open. It's been onward and upward after that first season."

The seasons at the Music Circus have changed. Where once musical/variety plays were presented for an entire week, now contemporary musicians and comedians perform for a single night, filling the public's need for professional, live entertainment.

"It's middle-of-the-road performers they want to see now," Rawson said, assured he feels the pulse of the ticket-purchasing public.

He continued, "The future looks bright for the Cohasset theatre, Generally, it's becoming increasingly difficult to fill a 2 to 3,000 seat venue, which our theatre is. But my instincts tell me the South Shore Music Circus will be around for many years."

The producer, who has overseen 20 seasons at the Sohier Street big top, considers this current season "a good year. There have been better and worse. But I think it'll average out to a season we'd call good."

The reputation of the South Shore theatre, considered to the top among the few remaining seasonal theatres in the country, will remain intact, he said. And Rawson is delighted he's been a builder of that reputation. "It's been very rewarding, being part of the Music Circus. It's been a source of satisfaction for me to bring so much enjoyment over the years to so many people," he commented. "That's a very unique thing to be able to do."

Rawson, who maintains an apartment in New York City and a home in Cohasset, arrives in town every spring to open up the theatre. For the foreseeable future, Rawson said he will continue his spring visits to the town he considers, "one of the most beautiful vistas in the country.

"I love Cohasset," he admitted. "And I'll miss everyone I've met over the past 20 years. Leaving is never easy. But I'm leaving this business in very capable hands. I have to face reality. Too many people hang on too long. I don't want to do that."

Rawson will continue with the Music Circus as a consultant; available, he said, "for an occasional phone call" from the new producer. For the remainder of the time, he simply intends to "go fishin'."

Selectman Burt Pratt is a member of the South Shore Playhouse Associates, operators of the Cohasset summer theatre. Considered a close friend of Rawson, Pratt praised the producer as "the single reason the Music Circus continues today.

"I have known Ron for 20 years and what he did was take an ailing theatre with an uncertain future, and put it on the right course," Pratt stated.

The theatre producer, according to Pratt, is departing the Music Circus, but leaving behind a legacy of overwhelming success. "I feel very confident that the theatre will continue pretty much the way it has for the past three or four years," Pratt stated. "Ron is leaving us in very capable hands. Mr. Kasses is a very experienced, capable producer."

The board of directors member noted that among the three remaining tent theatres in America, Cohasset is considered the finest and best-maintained. "That is a credit to Ron. He ran the show over there," he said.

Rawson, he continued, will be missed by townspeople who have worked at the theatre, met him in the local shops, or attended an evening performance. "He was part of this community," Pratt noted. "We will miss him. He was always interested in the welfare of the town. He would always ask me how things were going in the town. He's done great things for this town and the entire South Shore. I like him personally and professionally.

"I can say without doubt, he is a gentleman, a scholar and a damn good producer."

Bruce Cameron, president of the Playhouse Associates, commented that Rawson's greatest achievement was in his ability to overturn certain catastrophe and achieve financial stability. Through his management technique, Cameron said, the Playhouse Associates were able to grant more than $100,000 in community grants to qualified, non-profit organizations throughout the South Shore.

Through Rawson's leadership, he noted, the community assets of the South Shore Playhouse Associates grew to more than $2 million. "When he came here in 1967, those assets were negligible," Cameron said. "That he was able to overturn this was incredible.

"There have been a number of contributions Ron has made to this entire area over the years. He has continued to bring popular, professional entertainment here for 20 years, while continuing to upgrade the physical plant and be responsible for everything else. But if I had to isolate his greatest accomplishment, it was the fact that through his management, we have given well over $100,000 to qualified organizations in the past two years. And I'm assured his tradition will continue with Mr. Kasses."

Cameron continued, "I'm happy but sad about his retirement. I hate to see him step down. But he felt it was time for a change. He's known Mr. Kasses for many years. And we realize that if anyone could ever replace Ron Rawson at the Music Circus, this is the one man."

Regarding the retiring producer, Cameron stated, "Ron has made some pretty significant contributions to this town. He's made a lot of people happy. Everyone will miss him."

Harbor members set priorities

"I strongly suggest that we give these guys a raise, this is by no means a minimum wage job. And when you can start at a higher wage at a fast food restaurant I consider $5.00 a minimum wage," he said.

Tom Wigmore, Kurt Wiesenfluh and Steve Marsh were recently appointed to the position of assistant harbormaster by Osborne, "to get them out of the $5.00 pay cellar."

Osborne's staff assists him with harbor duties and patrols the harbor into the early morning hours.

The ongoing project of removing illegally moored boats from the harbor will continue.

"This operation has been totally successful," said Osborne. "The project will go on as long as I have this job."

"There are still something like 70 illegally moored boats in the harbor," said fisherman John Small.

"There are a lot of people who got moorings without ever going on a list," said Herb Jason of the committee. "I'd like to see us investigate some of these situations. There have been a lot of sweetheart deals going on."

Dale Silvia appeared in front of the board and testified that he was on the waiting list for a mooring since 1977 but was taken off the list in 1980 without being notified.

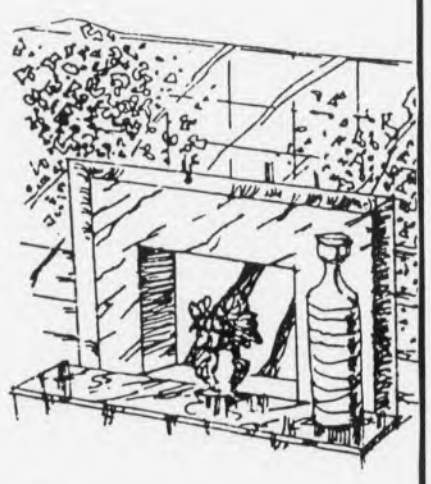
"Now I have a boat and no place to put it," said Silvia. "I figured why even get back on the list again after that, Harry would just take me off again."

"I don't know exactly what we can do about this," said Osborne, "but we can certainly try and do something."

The problem of decaying moorings was also discussed by the committee. Moorings are strictly the responsibility of the owner in Cohasset Harbor. Currently there are no inspection regulations concerning the tie-ups.

"Some chains have been reduced to something you wouldn't even put your dog on," said Osborne. "If there was a storm tonight and some of those big boats got loose where would the town be, the legal complications would be beyond your wildest dreams."

The board agreed to implement a mooring inspection system. Steve Osborne suggested a 20 percent system that would cover the entire harbor in five years.



The board also agreed that if the opportunity presented itself that the harbor should be dredged. Currently funding for this is being investigated.

Members also took under advisement the possibility of installing spider floats in the harbor to maximize the number of moorings in the harbor.

"I'd like to see the committee pursue this so we can accommodate more boats efficiently and safely," said John Pfaffman.

Land may be swapped for scholarship money

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

The scholarship coffers at Cohasset High School may be inflated.

Determined that a land sale should benefit the students of Cohasset, the school committee devised a unique plan Monday night.

In return for the sale or granting of an easement of school-controlled land, local developer Paul Ferrini may have to create a substantial scholarship fund.

Supt. Stephen Hart will discuss the proposal with town counsel. If allowed, an article will be drafted in which a 6,400 foot parcel of school-controlled land off Evergreen Lane will be sold or given as an easement to the developer. In return, Ferrini will be obligated to create a $15,000 scholarship for CHS graduates.

Ferrini explained to the school committee this week that he intends to build three homes on a parcel of land off Rte. 3A, bordering Evergreen Lane. Ferrini said he does not own the property but holds a purchase and sales agreement to purchase the land from Chief Justice Cushing Trust.

Both the planning board and the conservation commission agree that access from Evergreen Lane would be preferable to a more congested exit onto Rte. 3A. But in order to have that exit, Ferrini explained to the board, he needs a 6,400 square foot piece of the 20 acres the school department now owns.

Without committing themselves to a definite answer, the committee members told Ferrini they would be willing to place an article in the town meeting warrant for October 26. Town meeting is required to vote on a transfer of town-owned property.

Ferrini said he would be willing to swap an equal piece of land he owns to the rear of the development for the school-owned property.

Supt. Hart told the committee he recently received a letter from the Department of Mental Health. Officials there indicated they have located a buildable lot on the school-owned property they are considering for the site of an intermediate care facility for retarded adults. He said further information is necessary to determine where this site is in relation to the land Ferrini is requesting. "I wonder what impact that will have on this," he stated.

Committee members said although the planning board and conservation commission are concerned about safety of the families living in those new homes, they warned that a school bus would not be able to enter Evergreen Lane. A bus would still have to wait at the end of the street, despite the additional three families included in the new development.

"My gut feeling is that Evergreen Lane (rather than Rte. 3A) is certainly a better access for young people," Chairman Joseph Nedrow said. "But I'd be interested in this if you (Ferrini) would contribute to a scholarship fund - something that would benefit the kids in this town."

Member Diana Kornet agreed, noting that an easement or sale of the property would increase the value of the property Ferrini intends to purchase.

"I'm not interested in a land swap," member Barbara Bliss said," but in something that will be a financial benefit to this community."

Town counsel advised the committee that if an easement were granted, longterm liability insurance would have to be provided to the school department by the developer. The insurance would hold the school department harmless for an on-going period, Supt. Hart explained.

Kornet added that because the school department is guardian of the property for the town, an easement may be preferable to a sale. "There may be some time when we need an access there," she stated.

Chairman Nedrow said, "a sale will do nothing for the kids," noting that the money will go into the town's general fund and not specifically into the school budget. "We should do this in a way that the children will benefit," he added. "How about some gentleman's agreement that you'll donate something to the scholarship fund?"

Ferrini answered that it would depend on the amount requested for the donation. "If it's large, then I would tell the boards this plan is not feasible," he said.

School board member Christopher Ford, a local realtor, said he estimated that the parcel of land Ferrini is requesting is valued at $15,000. "It's something he could recover at $5,000 per home. Paul said he'd prefer to buy rather than an easement and have to deal with the liability, " Ford explained.

Ferrini said if he was able to tie that amount into the sale of each of the three homes, he would agree to the proposal.

The committee decided to have town counsel draft a article in time for the October 26 warrant to sell or grant an easement of land to Ferrini in return for a scholarship donation.

Last week the planning board concurred with the conservation commission that they would prefer to see the property entered from Evergreen Lane.

Ferrini told the board that if town meeting denies his request, "I don't want to repeat the whole process. We are anxious to move forward with this project."

The planning board last week expressed concern that approving a temporary entrance might create an unnecessary strain on the enviornment. Other concerns cited by the planning board include the recent perc testing by the state to locate a buildable site for a facility for retarded adults.

Member Peter Plante also stated, "as a taxpayer, I would think that there would have to be some compensation for going through town land."

The board concluded it would be safer for the families within the development to enter and exit from Evergreen Lane. "We are not ordering him to do this," Plante emphasized. "It is not our land."

Save Our Beaches

Cohasset selectmen are to be praised for their recent actions to protect the shores of our town.

They are supporting the Save The Beaches postion which stands vehemently against a proposal to locate a 17-foot sewage outfall pipe less than three miles off nearby Nantasket Beach. Selectmen have publically stated their opposition to this portion of the Massachusetts Water Resource Authority's (MWRA) plan to clean up the disaster known as Boston Harbor.

For the sake of one harbor, admittedly one of the most polluted in the nation, state officials intend to harm others. This huge-diameter outfall pipe will be spewing untreated or poorly-treated sewage out onto the southern shores for the first five years after this treatment plant is constructed.

This becomes an important environmental concern not only for the people of Hull, but for the South Shore which is once again being treated as a poor stepchild by the state bureacracy on Beacon Hill. Rumor within the state house indicates that although several sites for "the big pipe" are being publically discussed, Hull has the inside track. Lucky us.

A 17-foot diameter outfall pipe will be vomiting 500 million gallons of poorly-treated effluent "on a good day." How long will it take currents and ocean tides to bring that unwelcomed litter to Cohasset's shores? Can you imagine, an authority spokesman said that MWRA now has designed a system which will remove "the floatables" from the discharge by the time the outfall is activated, resulting in a much cleaner product than is now discharged from Nut and Deer Islands. Doesn't exactly make you want to stand up and cheer.

The problem is, this solution to Boston Harbor's significant woes has been studied for less than one year. The state is under a court-mandated order to find a solution within one year to this dilemma which has plagued Boston's precious shoreline for several decades.

This is not just a Hull problem. Two and a-half miles from shore is not a long distance. One selectman recently observed that Minot's Light is readily observed off our coast, and that is three miles away. This pipe will be even closer to our shores.

Senator William Golden is attempting to push back the deadline for deciding where this pipe will ultimately be located. The current deadline stands at Nov. 1, but he has stated that is far too little time to comprehensively study this fateful matter.

And Cohasset selectmen have sent a letter to the MWRA which outlines their opposition to this proposed plan which will affect our shores. They have also agreed to form a Cohasset subcommittee to the Hull-based Save Our Beaches.

Boston is under a court mandate to finally do something about a harbor that has been misused, ignored and destroyed.

Cohasset selectmen and all concerned residents of this town should do the same for our community. We should all be alarmed at this proposal which may harm our natural resources.

There will be a public meeting tonight (Aug. 13) in Scituate at the high school library on Rte 3A, next to the police station. The meeting begins at 7:30 p.m. All residents are urged to attend. MWRA officials who have been slow to speak on this matter have been invited to participate at this forum.

Minot's Ledge Light-Solitary Sentinal of Cohasset

By David Wadsworth
Cohasset Historical Society curator

The granite tower of Minot's Ledge Lighthouse, two and a half miles off the entrance of Cohasset Harbor and 127 years old this summer, has successfully withstood the very worst of climate and weather that the North Atlantic Ocean can produce.

Winter gales, summer hurricanes and mountainous waves alike have assaulted the solid granite structure at Outer Minot's Ledge for more than a century and a quarter; still the great high tower resists all efforts to undo the work done by Cohasseters who built the lighthouse in the mid-19th century.

The stone lighthouse at Minot's Ledge first sent its powerful life-saving beam across Massachusetts Bay in late sumer of 1860. The turning on of the great oil lamp that year signalled completion of a five year project undertaken by the U.S. Lighthouse Service and the Army Corps of Engineers to construct a structure strong enough to withstand the worst conditions that wind and wave can produce.

Minot's Ledge Light stands in one of the most exposed, — and most dangerous, — locations ever chosen for a lighthouse. In fact, a previous lighthouse at the same site, first lit on January 1 of 1850, lasted for only 16 months before falling into the sea, carrying its two keepers to their deaths. The great "Lighthouse Gale" of April 15 and 16, 1851 destroyed the original Minot's Ledge Light, and Cohasseters Joseph Wilson and Joseph Antoine met their deaths when it fell. Outer Minot's Ledge, a low rock barely awash at lowest of tides and constantly swept by the sea, had been chosen as the site for a badly-needed lighthouse to warn sailing vessels away from the treacherous Cohasset Rocks whose craggy pinnacles had claimed scores of vessels and hundreds of lives during the great "Age of Sail."

Following the collapse of the first Minot's in 1851, work began on its successor in 1855. It was decided to build a lighthouse of solid granite, firmly anchored to the small ledge, and more than one hundred feet tall to its topmost pinnacle. The design for the stone light was drawn by Gen. Joseph Totten of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, and Capt. Barton Alexander of the Corps was chosen to superintend the construction. The tower itself was to be made of Quincy Granite, a dark gray high-grade construction rock from the quarries of nearby Quincy. Chosen as the shore station facility and base of operations for construction of the lighthouse was a site at the southern edge of Cohasset's harbor, known today as Government Island.

Here the great blocks of granite were brought for stone cutting and fitting. Master stonecutters plied their art at Government Island to dovetail each block to its neighboring blocks in jigsaw fashion, in an exact fit. Today's small lighthouse park at the Island shows the two large granite and cement rings set in the ground as temporary foundations upon which the fit of the finished blocks was first tested. By 1857 the surface of Outer Minot's Lodge had been sculptured to receive the lowest courses of granite, and work could begin to put the blocks in place.

One by one the finely fitted blocks were transported from the Island to the offshore ledge, where they were raised to form each succeeding course. Dangers from wind and wave often were extreme at Outer Minot's Ledge, and work could progress only at times when conditions were the most calm. The summers of 1857 and 1858 saw the tower grow in height until it began to resemble the edifice so familiar today.

Each granite block weighed more than a ton, and there would be more than one thousand blocks in the structure when it was completed. Configuration of the dovetailed stones was such that the force of ocean waves striking the tower served to compress the blocks together rather than to force them apart. Thus was more strength added to the structure. From the first to the twenty second course, some 40 feet above its bottom, the tower is almost solid granite, only a small deep well for the storage of fresh water at the center of the circle of stone remained open. The 23rd course of blocks was the first to form walls for the living and working rooms of the tower.

Five stories of single, domed rooms served as quarters for the Head Lighthouse Keeper, Assistant Keepers, and Storage, Work and Observation areas. Then, above the topmost course of stone, rose the glass lantern room having a frame or "mullions" of brass. Above the lantern area, a dome of brass surmounted the structure, terminating with a decorative brass ball and then a lightning rod, reaching to a total height of 114 feet above the ocean. The great beacon itself, at first an oil lantern, shown at a height of 96 feet and one inch above the lowest part of the structure.

Dedication of the lighthouse tower itself was held on October 2, 1858, even before its completion. Among speakers at the ceremony were Capt. Alexander, Superintendent of construction, and the Hon. Edward Everett, notable orator. Dedication of the structure, in this case, celebrated the placing of the official "cornerstone," actually some one of the stones perhaps in the vicinity of the doorway, part way up the side of the tower. The second, and present, Minot's Ledge Lighthouse was completed on September 15, 1860 at a cost of about $300,000, and represented some 1,102 hours of work to put in place 2,367 tons of solid granite blocks, numbering 1,079 individual blocks.

Later, when the Lighthouse Service was experimenting with giving each individual lighthouse its own characteristic sequence of flashes, Minot's received the unique pattern of flashes by which it is almost universally known, the pattern 1-4-3. The experiment in assigning numerical patterns to each lighthouse was discontinued soon, and Minot's Ledge is one of the very few to retain that kind of distinctive signal. From its beginning in 1860 to the installing of its automated equipment in 1947, Minot's was manned by a succession of Head Lighthouse Keepers and Assistant Keepers. The first Head Keeper in residence at the light was Joshua Wilder, the last was Keeper Fitzpatrick. Cohasseters served as both Head and Assistant Keepers at the light. Ashore, when off duty, most Keepers and their families resided in the large duplex houses built by the Lighthouse Service at Government Island.

This summer of 1987 sees a major repair project underway to strengthen the uppermost parts of the lighthouse. For a time, the famous beacon will be turned off, until new granite blocks can be cut and installed to replace those damaged by the sea. By next year, Minot's should once again throw its familiar beam across the bay for mariners in search of haven.

Hull group tries to Save Our Beaches

By Susan Ovans
Special to the Mariner

One of the most volatile issues on the South Shore right now, especially in Hull, is the possibility that the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority (MWRA) may site a 17-foot diameter sewage outfall pipe—roughly the size of the Callahan Tunnel—2.5 miles off Nantasket Beach.

The Hull site is one of seven locations under study by the MWRA, the agency responsible for the $2.5 billion Boston Harbor cleanup project.

The MWRA plans to pump 500 million gallons of effluent per day from a new secondary treatment plant at Deer Island to an ocean location. The sole discharge tunnel will handle all the sewage from the MWRA's 43 user communities.

Approximately 2.5 million people—roughly 40 percent of the state's population—currently live, work or use those communities' resources for recreation—all contribute to the current degradation of the harbor.

Both the Hingham and Cohasset selectmen, concerned that the Hull site may be designated, have sent letters to the MWRA protesting any plan to site the outfall off Nantasket Beach.

Additionally, the South Shore Coalition, a 10-town consortium established nearly two years ago to seek regional solutions to mutual problems, will sponsor what is being billed as a "town meeting" on the harbor cleanup plan and its ramifications. The meeting will be held Thursday, Aug. 13, at 7:30 p.m. at Scituate High School Library.

These moves by local and regional officials on Hull's behalf go beyond mere neighborliness, for that town's shores will not be the only ones affected. Because of the nature of the plan, tidal and current conditions and the sheer volume of sewage to be pumped through the outfall, Hull is only a first defense for Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield, Duxbury, and even perhaps, Plymouth.

The MWRA's court-mandated harbor cleanup schedule ordered the authority make a preliminary

Sailing club enjoys a great year

Heather Lyons gets a helping hand from Cohasset Sailing club instructor Sara Tague, as she prepares for a sail in the harbor.

Chief instructor Alan Cooke gives three Able Seaman students a sailing lesson in one of the club's Mercury sailboats.

The Cohasset Sailing Club reports a near-record enrollment of 141 sailors as the club reaches the mid-season mark, according to Vice Commodore Steve Bartow.

The junior training program under the direction of Chief Instructor, Alan Cooke, has 96 students in four levels of instruction. There are 33 students in beginning Able Seaman, 26 in Mate, 18 in Skipper and 19 in combined Sailing Master/Quarter Master.

Weekend adult training is handled by veteran instructor Bob Jackson who reports a total of 45 students. The beginners Saturday morning class has 31 and the intermediate Sunday class includes 14 students.

In addition to sailing instruction, many club students participate in local regattas with neighboring clubs.

Cohasset Sailing Club sailors showed their colors in the recent Hingham Bay Junior Regatta. From a total of 45 boats entered, Pat Suhrbier and Bill Baird captured first place, with John Kinchla and Andrew Rossi second; Jennifer O'Leary and Jennifer Goodman, fifth and Chip Kennedy and Erik Waal, fifteenth. Club instructors and dock masters can also be seen leading the pack in the harbor's Flying Scot and 210 racing fleets.

The Cohasset Sailing Club provides instruction in a fleet of 10.15' Mercury and six Turnabout sailboats. Membership is open to any town resident, and members and friends are invited to the club's annual clambake, Saturday, August 22.

Donaldson's swale effects neighbors

The feud between the Donaldson family and their new neighbors on Bates Lane continued this week in front of the planning board.

The Donaldsons, upon arrival in Cohasset, learned that actions taken to improve a "swale" in their backyard were prohibited by a state wetlands statute. A six inch pipe had been inserted in the swale to alter the flow of the swale.

Charles Donaldson explained to the board that as a condition of his purchase of the house the swale was to be filled, the ensuring work was done by Paul Laugelle until the Donaldsons received a cease and desist order from the conservation committee.

"That was the first inkling I had that I was doing something wrong," said Donaldson. "No one including Harold Litchfield or Paul Laugelle ever mentioned the fact that this was not the right way to go about it."

The problem discussed by the planning board was the effect on abutters.

"I looked at the site and I don't see any effects on the Gonsalves property (to the west)," said a town engineer. "I am concerned about backed up water on Mr. Carbone's property. It's really hard to say if it is affecting the property at all, maybe just a couple of inches of the property."

Carbone, an abutting neighbor on Bates Lane, had previously hired counsel to prevent the filling in of the swale.

"It may be OK now," said Carbone, "but five years down the line who knows?"

The planning board concurred that Carbone's land should in no way be affected.

Pat Plante of the board urged Carbone to wait and see what happens with proposed drainage plans.

"The swale should be brought back to where it was in the beginning," said Plante.

Engineer Gary James appeared before the planning board on Wednesday, Aug. 5, with plans for a proposed nine-lot subdivision off Rosano Lane near North Main Street and the bird sanctuary. James, representing Brian R. Davis, explained that eight homes are tentatively slated to surround a 1000-foot long linear cul-de-sac.

The property, slightly to the east of the bird sanctuary, now has a house, a barn, two sheds and some junk cars on it.

"There are absolutely no signs of hazardous waste," said James in reply to planning board concerns.

The board showed concern that the extra run off from the project might affect the nearby sanctuary pond.

"The existing two-family house on the property will be moved," said James.

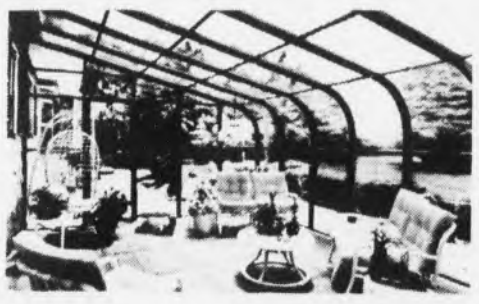
Rich tradition of 210 racing

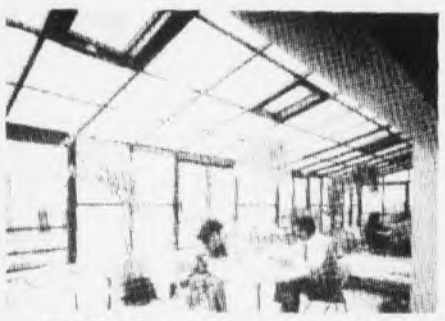
By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

With the 210 National championships close at hand, all eyes are focused on the Cohasset fleet. The Cohasset Yacht Club has become synonomous with success in the 210 world. The trophy case is to 210 racing what the rafters of the Boston Garden are to basketball.

Thirteen boats compete in the fleet this year. Oddly enough, the first 210 ever built and the most recently built 210, boat number 437, are both members of the fleet. Sarah Leggat has revamped her original 210 and renamed it Leg It. Richard Schulz along with partner Jim Summers have been contending in their brand new craft, Lateral Wabbit.

The long tradition of 210 racing success at CYC begins with Dick Sullivan who has raced in every 210 National Championship since the first one in 1947. Sullivan, who now has a regatta named after him, captured his first National title in 1958 in Rye, New York. He will be sailing for victory again starting Monday, Aug. 24, at the Nationals in Hingham Bay.





The more recent feather in the cap of the CYC is John Keane. Keane has guided his 210 Gezgo to three National championships in the last five years.

Sam Wakeman is nother yacht clubber to distinguish himself. Wakeman has successfully participated in four defenses of the Americas Cup.

Greg Bemis, another CYC 210 sailor has been a judge for the Olympic Sailing Championships. Rounding out the core of the 210 fleet are some other big names in Cohasset sailing including George Littlejohn, T.H. Hamilton, and Diaramud O'Connel. Locals will be treated to some of the best yacht racing has to offer by this very elite group of racers at the Nationals and this weekend at an inter-club tournament in Gloucester.

Sarah Leggat sets sail in Cohasset Harbor in the original 210 renamed "Leg It."

Exercise course begins for handicapped disabled persons are often isolated and feel ostracized from the remainder of the community.

"One of my goals is to bring people in who never thought about joining an exercise class before," she stated. "Kathy told me that recently a young disabled girl told her she never went out of her home at night. That's the type of person I want to reach.

"A lot of time these people are afraid of exercising - afraid of getting from their house to the center. But the SCOOT van will take care of that problem. And maybe we can get the younger disabled persons to help out with the senior citizens, and vice versa. My plan is to have everyone helping out."

Gurnett began her career in therapeutic movement while interning at the Brockton VA Hospital when she was a senior in college. Her internship was spent under the tutorlege of Alicia Flaherty who used dance and movement with her patients which include victims of alzheimer's disease, psychiatric patients, alcoholics and drug addicts. "That's how I got into it," she explained.

Since that time, Gurnett has developed her own business, going to VA hospitals and nursing homes and conducting specialized exercise classes.

"It really brings them out of their shell," she said. "And it makes people very happy to exercise. They're all smiles. Even the hardest person will eventually join in.

"I remember, once there was one woman who just sat there with her arms crossed, determined not to join the class. I introduced myself as I always do - it's important to treat everyone with respect - and she shook my hand. I said she could stay and listen to the music. And at the end of the class I saw her lifting her arms to the exercises. I know eventually they'll come around, but only when they're ready," she stated.

The Cohasset class will concentrate on maintaining and increasing muscle strength, flexibility and range of motion (how far you can bring your arms up or around), and improving fine and gross motor coordination. Exercises such as these, Gurnett explained, are therapuetic for stroke patients, cardiac care patients, and persons disabled by age or injury.

"We also work on maintaining the quality of well body parts, which is important for stroke persons. We want those good muscles to stay that way - while improving the strength of injured body parts," she added.

What is as important in these classes, according to the instructor, is the socialization as well as the physical therapy. "We're talking about people who may never get outside their home. For them, the socialization is as important as the physical exercise," she stated.

"A lot of the activities I design work on the development of social skills, in addition to physical improvement," Gurnett continued. "For example, I tell them to spread their fingers and I go around to each of them and put my fingers inside their's and tell them to force my hand away. They have to talk to me and interact with me. They get a lot of one-on-one contact from me."

A parachute exercise, in which the entire class works as a team to pull the chute up and down, is a perfect time for laughter and exercise. Gurnett also includes a time where class members have to yell 'hello' under the parachute as they lift it above their heads. "It sounds silly, but we really laugh and giggle," she said. "They realize they're all members of the same team, and if anyone doesn't do their part, the parachute will drop."

Although Gurnett is a certified aerobics instructor and also teaches tumble tots, line dancing and a pre-teen dance class, working with the disabled is a special activity for the busy athlete.

And despite her perfect physical condition, Gurnett cautions seniors and disabled residents not to overdo the exercises. "I tell them, listen to your body. Never push beyond your capability. I tell them if they get tired, rest. And if it hurts, don't do it," she said.

"I love exercising and moving," the energetic Weymouth resident said. "I'm doing what I love to do and it makes other people happy. What the heck . . . " outfall siting decision by Sept. 15. The authority recently requested a two-month delay from U.S. District Court Judge A. David Mazzone because a majority of the agency's scientific consultants believe they have not had enough time to conduct and analyze sufficient environmental studies to determine the best possible site.

Hull group tries to Save Our Beach

In a recent status report to state Sen. William B. Golden (D-Weymouth), Judith Pederson, chairman of the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs technical advisory group (EOEA-TAG), wrote: "It is the court-mandated schedule, effectively requiring a decision by the fall of 1987 after less than a year of real study, that is the problem."

In the letter, Pederson said a majority of the TAG's members believe the siting decision could be delayed "as much as a year or two without altering the ultimate date of pipeline completion." MWRA spokesman Len Cawley, however, said that the agency cannot apply for permits without designating the preliminary outfall site. "EPA (the federal Environmental Protection Agency) and DEQE (the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering) have said they will not allow us to apply for permits without designating a terminus, and we cannot live with a year or two of delay."

Golden has maintained that the siting decision is being made "in a scientific vacuum," and has consistently urged a postponement.

Members of the MWRA board of directors last week were adamant that they will not seek a siting delay past the Nov. 1 deadline.

Three board members reportedly have said they already "substantially know" where the outfall will go despite the fact that the TAG and other consultants have yet to represent their conclusions.

Because the Hull site and another 2.5 miles off Nahant's Tudor Beach have been publicized as finalists in the decision process, activist organizations in both communities have banded together to push for the deepest ocean site possible, along with increased and more complex scientific evaluations.

Hull residents earlier this summer formed an organization called Save Our Beaches (SOB) to "support the preservation of Massachusetts Bay," while Nahant three years ago established SWIM (Safer Water in Massachusetts).

"It is our position that if a site 2.5 miles off Hull's beaches is not safe for our children, then similarly, it is not safe for the children of Nahant," said SOB president David Kellem recently. "The MWRA, morally and ethically, must put the outfall as far out as possible because they admit they do not have sufficient environmental and public health criteria to do anything more than guess as to where it should go."

The two coalitions have adopted a three-point policy: In summary, the policy contends that:

- The authority should ask for a court delay in scheduling any siting decision until adequate studies are completed; failing a delay, the authority should site the outfall in the deepest possible location.
- The MWRA shold not make the outfall operational until a new secondary treatment plant is completed.

Authority engineers estimate that each mile of pipe will cost $20 million. The deepest site under study is eight miles from Hull, five miles from Nahant, nine miles from Winthrop's Deer Island. The MWRA's current plan is to activate the outfall in 1994, five years before the new secondary treatment plant at Deer Island is scheduled to be completed.

Cohasset officials explode to crush Scituate

By Bill Modestino
Mariner correspondent

Scituate town officials assured themselves of a victory, leading by five runs entering the bottom half of the seventh and the last chance for Cohasset Town officials to challenge.

However, Cohasset exploded for six runs in the inning and evaded the jaws of defeat, 8-7, in a Jimmy Fund benefit softball game played behind the library last Sunday.

Cliff Mitman, Cohasset selectman, sent everybody home before the rains came when he delivered a single to right field off starting and losing pitcher Gerry Dwight.

Dwight, who resembled Roger Clemens in the beginning and, then transformed into Calvin Schiraldi at the end, is responsible for the cross-town rival, round-robin tournament. Other towns participating in the month-long tournament are Hingham, Norwell, and Marshfield.

Previously, Scituate has competed against Cohasset in a one-game stand off. This year the games will be played every Sunday from August 9 to August 30 in Scituate. The Championship game is slated for August 30.

Scituate jumped to a 4-0 lead in the second on five straight hits. Don Brown began the attack with a lead-off single. The finance committee member advanced to second on another single by selectman, Joe Morton.

Gary Dwight, who works for the recreation department, stroked a double that scored Brown.

Gerry's other son, Mike, and J.L. Murphy slammed back-to-back triples that closed out the scoring for Scituate.

Cohasset added two runs in the bottom half of the second to cut the deficit to two runs, 4-2.

Scituate would tally single runs in the third, fifth, and sixth innings.

Before Mitman's heroics in the seventh Cohasset also received key hits from Tony Fasciano (a Town Hall study committee member) and selectman Jim Gallagher.

Fasciano's single drove in two runs while Gallagher's single scored one run during the six-run inning.

After the ballgame, both coaches joyfully poked fun at eachother for the competitive contest.

"We haven't practiced at all because of the shortage of players," said Jack Worley, the recreation director in Cohasset. "With the victory, we may never practice at all."

"If we had Dr. John Kulevich and Dr. Jim Lonborg on the team, we would have had them warming up in the bullpen and put an end to their (Cohasset) rally," said Paul Scott, the coach for Scituate.

LDS "Kids's Day"

For Gary Irish, a member of the Latter Day Saints church in Hingham, magic is more than a hobby.

As a child of nine, his dad gave him a magic set. That was back in Chicago before he had studied architecture, set sail around the world, married and raised a family. Now he is a resident of Marshfield and heads his own graphic arts business on Newbury Street, Boston.

On a recent Saturday he put on two shows at Kids Fest in the town of Hull, and one for the children at "Pioneer Day" at his own LDS Church in Hingham. Irish will admit to never being happier than when entertaining a crowd of hand-waving kids.

Swimmer to compete in Junior Olympics

Annie Henry, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Wm Henry, Jr. of 94 N. Main Street, will be a participant in three events in synchronized swimming at the AAU/USA National Junior Olympic Games at the University of Syracuse this week.

She qualified in three events in the 13/14 age group category at the Arizona state meet and at the western regional meet. Annie placed first in the duet and team events and second in solo at these meets. She also placed second in figures. Every swimmer must perform six figures and this score is added to the routine score.

The Mesa Arizona team will have twelve swimmers and twelve routines entered in the Syracuse meet. There are some 25 sporting events and 4500 athletes in the National Junior Olympics. In the sport of synchronized swimming, athletes must place among the top three finishers in their state and then in their regional meet and must be between 13-18 years of age.

Annie and her duet partner, Emily Porter of Mesa, placed fourth out of 30 13/14 duets at the U.S. National Age Group Meet in Baton Rouge, Louisiana in June. Ann and Em also swam with the 13/14 Mesa team of eight and received the bronze medal in the team event. The two girls placed in the top 25 out of 200 in the 13/14 age group figures.

Ten girls on the Mesa synchro team also attended the U.S. Junior Nationals in Seattle in Feb. where Annie swam with the "A" team. This team of eight girls (ages 13-17) made it to finals and placed sixth in the team event. Tracy Ruiz, the double gold medal winner in synchro at the L.A. '84 Olympics, presented the team with their 6th place medals. Annie and Emily qualified in the top 25 duets and made the semi-fianals at Jr. Nationals. They were one of the youngest duets as some of the entries are in their twenties. In Jr./Sr. level competitions there are no age group divisions.

FEMA rejects Nuke plant plans

By Sue Asci
Mariner staff

In a report submitted to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission last week, the Federal Emergency Management Agency stated that current off-site evacuation plans in case of an accident at Pilgrim nuclear power plant are inadequate. And although state public safety officials concur with the finding, they maintain there are inaccuracies in the federal evaluation of those plans.

FEMA has responded to emergency plans submitted by the state Civil Defense Agency in a variety of ways since 1981. In 1981, FEMA found the plans to be inadequate. Weaknesses identified at that time were subsequently corrected, and after conducting exercises in 1982, FEMA found the plans to be adequate.

The plans were again determined to be adequate after an exercise in 1983. Then, in 1985 during a September exercise, flaws were found in the plan.

FEMA spokesman Bill McAda said state Secretary of Public Safety Charles Barry initiated his own study of the emergency plans after 1985. In his report, he cited a number of concerns.

FEMA submitted a report to the NRC last week stating that the existing emergency plans are inadequate based on:

- a lack of evacuation plan for schools.
- the lack of a reception center in North Plymouth.
- a lack of public shelter for the beach population.
- a lack of inadequate planning for the special needs population and for the transport dependent.
- an overall lack of progress in planning.

FEMA noted that this ruling supersedes the agency's interim findings that the plans were adequate.

"The same plan from 1981 is different," said McAda. "They've (state civil defense officials) changed their position on the decontamination center and on the use of buses for the transport dependent."

Residents protest King St. traffic plans

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

King Street residents came to Monday night's selectmen's meeting in full force to show their concern about a proposed traffic signal on the King Street-Route 3A intersection; almost directly across the street from the Super Stop and Shop site.

Atty. Charles Humphrey representing Vanasse Hangen Brustlin, Inc. asked selectmen for a approval of a plan that would install an island with a flashing light and a yield sign.

"King Street has been studied extensively," said Humphrey, "Engineers felt that traffic coming from 3A was for their own reasons(going to or from their house). The five consultants viewed that King street is not a problem; when one approaches a traffic signal they tend to slow down."

Residents vehemently disagreed. Nancy Garrison, one of the spokespersons for the 25 King Street residents in attendance told the board, "We were hopeful that the new Stop and Shop might help us but indeed no, it has turned it into a very serious problem."

In a written statement to the board, Garrison summed up their position,"What we are seeing in this proposed traffic pattern is exactly what we have feared most; that is, the actual encouragement of traffic to diverge onto King street. Impatient motorists will now seek to avoid not only existing lights at the Pond street and Beechwood street intersections, but even more crucially, to avoid the new set of lights at the very entrance of our street, with their rate of speed unchecked."

Manager Panico leads the C.C. plan

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

It's a tough job that demands brain and brawn. The heavy construction crew at the community center requires a boss who's tough, strong and knows the trade inside and out.

Lynn Panico is the perfect woman for the job.

A petite, strong woman, Panico is seen everyday on the North Main Street job. A white hard hat sits atop her wavy, cropped hair. Blouse and pants are set off by a pair of construction grade boots.

Panico may be the only construction project manager in this area who wears earrings on the job and has a keen eye for fine jewelry.

A resident of Boston's Back Bay, Panico is project manager of the $400,000 community center renovation project. A mechanical engineer, she is employed by Pullman Corp., the company hired by the center to complete the renovations and addition.

"My job," she explained during a brief coffee break at the site, "is to be responsible for the completion of the whole project, including the design, putting the different jobs out to bid, selecting the subcontractors who will be working with me, and making the design decisions on the job."

She can often be seen striding atop the roof at the community center, helping to frame the wooden structure, or hammering nails alongside her crew. "Whatever I have to do, I do," she stated.

Last week, one of her responsibilities included scheduling and overseeing the 35-ton crane that hoisted pre-fabricated trusses atop the new community center addition.

Her crew at the center can range from 15 to 20, including project coordinator Kelly Strout. "She's my second if I'm not around," Panico stated. "She performs a lot of the jobs, including cost-tracking and keeping track of the comings and goings of the crew."

Pullman Corp. also employs a female who completes

New age welcomed at Bassings Beach

"When the moon is in the seventh house and Jupiter aligns with Mars, then peace will guide the planets and love will steer the stars
This is the dawning of the age of Aquarius"

(from the musical Hair.)

That is exactly what quite a few people believe; that the Harmonic Convergence actually represents, the dawning of a new age of man.

For the cosmically unenligtened, the Harmonic Convergence refers to the dates August 16-17, which have long been prophesied as a critical turning point for the planet . The Hopi and other Indians prophesied that on Aug. 17, "144,000 Sun Dance enlightened teachers will totally awaken in their dream mind bodies... and the Rainbow lights will be seen all over the world and these rainbow dreams will help awaken the rest of humanity.

" The Aztec calender ends on August 17, 1987, and according to the ancient Maya this past weekend was the exact date that marks "precise calibration points in a harmonic scale that mark the moment when the process of global civilization climaxes."

Local astrologers brought the dawning of this new age in a number of various ways. The center of physic activity in Cohasset took place on Bassings Beach. Although this date signifies the lining up of a large number of planets one could not witness this with the naked eye.

"This is an energy spot," said Duneen Pride of Hammond road, "There is much more than meets the eye. This date has a power, an energy. All of this will come to light."

"The convergence," continued Pride, "will blow holes in the way people act, the way they perceive things."

Cohasset's week . . .

Gas tank registrations

The board of health has announced they will start enforcing the registration of gas and propane tanks as required by the April Town meeting.

Members said they will start demanding the removal of all unregistered tanks because they pose a health hazard to the town's watershed. Anyone with an unregistered tank will have 30 days to remove the tank from the ground.

Health Board Chairman John Burns said unregistered tanks were a health concern because they could be leaking gas into the ground water and into Lily Pond since they have not been inspected.

He said they will try forming a committee to look for leaky tanks and areas where contamination may be flowing into the pond.

The board also voted to change the designation of the landfill to a solid waste disposal facility in order to comply with DEQE regulations for a transfer station.

State regulations say that a landfill can not be used as a transfer station, but do allow solid waste disposal sites. The board is planning to go before voters in October to ask for funding for the transfer station.

Selectmen action

Firefighter William Sestito was granted a two week leave of absence without pay by selectmen Monday night. Sestito who has yet to officially join the force asked for the leave of absence for the end of August for his wedding and honeymoon.

The board also approved a request for a transfer of $975 for the engineering costs incurred in the sale of the Independence Building.

Selectmen denied a waiver of the $30 fee for the building and land used for the jointly held Church Fair in December. The selectmen did however approve fair representative Cathy Pratt use of the common and the Town Hall for the December extravaganza.

The board also made six appointments. Don Evans was reappointed to the Cohasset Common Historic District and joining him will be Wigmore Pearson. James Cox was appointed to the Conservation Committee. The Harbor Study Committee picked up William Stone and the Historic Commission picked up Grace Tuckerman. David Marks was reappointed to the 3 year term of Shellfish Constable.

Mooring barge questioned

"I don't see the Mooring Barge as an asset to the harbor," said Harbormaster Steve Osborne at Monday's selectmen's meeting. "It's a dangerous piece of equipment." A mooring barge is used predominately for the pulling and inspecting of boat anchorage.

Selectman Rocky Laugelle raised the question of mooring inspection, "I think you should keep it until you have something else."

"If I am going to be paid by the town to take care of private moorings, that would be a conflict of interest," said Osborne.

The actual inspection of moorings will be contracted out and done by private contractors starting next year. It has not yet been decided as to how many contractors would be allowed in the harbor.

"A monopoly is fine with me as long as they are not cheating the boat owners," said Osborne. Meanwhile the mooring barge, "is in pretty tough shape," added Osborne.

"The inspections will be at the owners discretion. I have been making them aware of this."

Affordable housing plans

Preliminary steps to assure affordable housing for Cohasset residents are currently in the works. The state has received a list of possible town owned and private property which officials believe could be developed into low and moderate income housing.

Since 1983, Cohasset has been threatened by the Executive Office of Communities and Development with a cut off in state funds for local projects until the town moves toward providing more affordable housing.

"The agreement," said Executive Secretary Donald Andrew, "is as long as we proceed with this in good faith . . . funds will not be withheld."

The list of possible locations for housing contains 24 town-owned properties and 16 privately owned parcels accounting for a total of 224 acres.

A fair part of the proposed properties is already developed and may prove to be vacant, such as Joseph Osgood School and the Highway Department Garage.

Parcels of undeveloped land near the center of town include sites off Cedar Street and North Main Street.

"Developing this site inventory was the first step," said Andrew. "The second step is to finalize the preliminary list," he added. This final list is due to be submitted in late September.

According to Andrew, other steps moving in the direction of providing low income housing include, "a review of all zoning by-laws by the Planning Board."

"The Housing Authority is filing for section 705," said Andrew explaining this gives assistance for scattered site housing.

"The purpose of these actions," said Andrew, "is to encourage developers to make low income housing available and also to make sure that the zoning by-laws of the town do not discourage it or restrict it (low income housing).

Bd. of Health requests landfill plans

The board of health said Monday they will send a letter to Cohasset Heights Limited demanding to know their intentions with the landfill.

Board members said they plan to meet with CHL and selectman next week to discuss proposals for an interception and treatment system to remove volatile organic compounds from groundwater flowing beneath the landfill.

The town has accused CHL of contaminating the groundwater by allowing leachate break-outs from the landfill and from surface water contamination in area adjacent to the landfill.

The board voted May 1,1986 to suspend the landfill's site assignment to CHL until a leachate management plan could be developed to prevent contamination of the ground water and required the company to monitor the groundwater.

Although CHL corrected their leachate plan Nov. 12, 1986, the board issued a violation notification to CHL because they had not submitted any quarterly groundwater samplings to the board.

CHL then hired Camp Dresser and McKee (CDM) to conduct the sampling. But last March, the board held another public hearing to determine whether CHL site assignment should be suspended because of further contaminations and reports of carcinogens leaking out of the landfill site.

During subsequent sessions of the public hearing, CHL presented proposals to the board to control the contamination.

Health member William Baird said DEQE's Water Pollution control said they were unaware of the contamination of the ground water, and were upset to learn that GHR Engineering was sending the water supply samples to the solid Waste Commission to be filed, and not to them.

Health agent Joseph Godzik said there was also a discrepancy in the concentration amounts from recent water samples taken by GHR Engineering Associates, Inc., and the DEQE.

Godzik said GHR recorded benzine levels of 59 ppb in ground water samples taken near the landfill, while DEQE did not find any trace of Benzine in the water. "It seems like a pretty big discrepancy," he said. "How do you know which one's right?"

A new age welcomed at Bassings Beach

Pride, who will be celebrating the arrival of the new age in Hingham, is very dedicated to the spirituallity of life.

"I am interested in maintaining balance of body, mind and spirit. I think that it is important to make it part of my everday life. There are a lot of distractions like wealth, bills and what not living in Cohasset. The convergence should provide an understanding of natural laws and it will provide an awakening for people in the way that they perceive ther lives."

Susan Rogerson, another Cohasset resident, is a firm believer in the significance of the philosophies of the Native American Indians.

"The native American view this as a purification for the planet. The Hopis' were in a sense the protectors of the planet because of their very independent way of life."

"What this country has done to the native American is Just like sticking the last dagger in his back," Rogerson said, "that is what makes me want to participate in this whole thing."

Rogerson is also involved with the Big Mountain project, an effort partly organized by Yoko Ono (wife of former Beatle John Lennon) to donate art proceeds to fund the Native Americans battle to save parts of their homelands.

"This is very ceremonial, in essence it is about the life force," said Rogerson. "It is a communion with the sunrise, the ocean and the air. I feel that Cohasset is a very special place. I want to honor this place, I could celebrate this anywhere but Cohasset is very special, I am honoring the spirit of Cohasset."

Nearly 20 people attended this ceremony at Bassings Beach in Cohasset. Much larger ceremonies to bring in the Harmonic Convergence were held in Hingham and at the Arnold Arboretum in Boston.

Rogerson constructed a special ceremonial drum made from pig skin and a carefully hollowed out log. Rogerson was joined by friends and family at the vigil on Bassings Beach.

"It is just incredible," said Rogerson, " If there are enough people honoring the positive parts of life, then it is really going to do something. That is why I wanted to do this in Cohasset , it is good to be with people and to all share in this."

Rob Whelan excels in golf

Washington and Jefferson College of Washington P.A. was unable to defend its Presidents' Athletic Conference championships in baseball and golf, but several student-athletes including a Cohasset student earned postseason recognition from the conference.

Rob Whelan of Cohasst let the Presidents to a second-place finish at the conference golf championships. Rossi, a junior from Clairton, PA., and Whelan, a senior from Cohasset, Mass., were named the all-conference second team. During the two-day tournament, Rossi shot a 167 and Whelan followed with a 168.

King Street residents unhappy with traffic plans

Garrison continued,"This plan would prove to be an exacerbation of the already intolerable traffic volume and speeding problems on our narrow, rural road.

"The fact is that people speed, we are not creating the problem," Humphrey explained to the Board. "It is not designed to draw traffic," he continued, "the average speed on 3A is below the speed limit in that area ."

"Familiarity breeds contempt," argued King street resident and engineer Mark Bell. "It is very difficult to walk on that street. The board should try it our way, we are the people that live on the street. The town is changing and it is not for the better."

Many residents feel that making King street a one way street would be the answer. Garrison told the board, "Our group hopes to insert a warrant article for next October's special Town Meeting which would prohibit southbound access to King Street at the 3A intersection, and would make King Street one-way in a northerly direction between Pond street and Chief Justice Cushing Highway. We feel that this compromise can solve some, if not all of our dangerous traffic problems."

"I don't think there is any need of it, the lights are going to slow the traffic down," said Selectman Rocky Laugelle.

Ken Ingbar of King street disagreed, "The new intersection is liable to get congested. You want to eliminate congestion. Diverting traffic on King Street increases existing traffic which is already intolerable and will bring in an unknown amount."

In a stirring oratory that prompted applause from the audience, Mark Donovan of King Street told the board that the proposed solution was off base. "I suggest to the Board that you represent the residents of King Street instead of worrying about the state," said Donavan.

Selectman Jim Gallagher suggested,"I think we should postpone this and meet with the planning board."

"We should have something to go with," added Laugelle.

Attorney Humphrey stated,"We've been talking about this for about two years, and we've spent well over $40,000 on plans. The board can just accept these plans with the assertion that they want to bring about changes in them."

Gallaghers motion to meet with the planning board won unanimous acceptance from selectmen.

Music Circus to host area Polka Party

"Polka Party '87" is a party to celebrate the sounds and colors of one of the world's most popular dances. And it all takes place at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset Tuesday, Aug. 25, at 8 p.m.

"Polka Party '87" stars two of the nation's premiere polka bands. From New York—The Jimmy Sturr Orchestra. And from Chicago—Eddie Blazonczyk's Versatones.

Topping off the program will be the Karolinka Dancers, an award-winning troupe of young dancers which has performed up and down the east coast.

From the All-American Polkafest to guest appearances with Bobby Vinton, the Karolinka Dancers are dedicated to preserving the traditions and customs of The Polka.

As this event was sold out during its 1986 appearance at the Music Circus, patrons are advised to get their tickets now, either at the Music Circus box office, located on Sohier Street off Route 3A in Cohasset, or at any Ticketron location.

Tickets may also be charged by phone if patrons call 383-1400 any day after 10 a.m.

Area selectmen meet to plan a clean coastline

By John Magadieu
Mariner staff

Citizens and selectmen from 10 South Shore towns sent a strong message to officials of the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority Aug. 13: Keep our coastline clean.

The MWRA is considering five sites in Massachusetts Bay to discharge wastewater from treatment plants at Deer and Nut Islands in Boston Harbor. The closest potential location to the South Shore is about two-and-a-half miles east of Allerton Point in Hull. The farthest location under consideration is about eight miles from Hull.

While meeting with the South Shore Coalition and about 150 concerned citizens at the Scituate High School library last Thursday, Paul Levy, executive director of the MWRA, and his engineers presented their Boston Harbor cleanup plan.

MWRA Spokesman Leonard Cawley explained that the authority will be making "fast track improvements" to the sewer system in anticipation of putting a new treatment plant on line at Deer Island, replacing the existing plants.

The MWRA, he added, also will be working to control toxics through new regulation, with monitoring and strict enforcement to stop the pollution at its source. The authority is also considering "the deep rock tunnel option," Cawley said. That proposal is to build tunnels under the harbor to hold excess flows during rainstorms, to make sure all effluent is treated before it is released.

Cawley announced that the MWRA has agreed with General Dynamics to buy the 185-acre Quincy Shipyard, to be used as a staging area for the construction of new primary and secondary treatment facilities on Deer Island. Upon completion of the sale, the MWRA will use the piers there to transport equipment, materials and personnel to the island.

"Senator William Golden tells a story about jogging along the beach and finding it befouled with condoms and tampon applicators," he noted. "The engineering part of the system can be improved, but aside from the engineering part of it, we have to ask 'Why did so many people dispose of these things in this way?' It's a question of education about what is appropriate to put into the sewerage system. An even bigger question is, 'Why are these things non-biodegradable?'

"We need your help," Cawley urged the crowd. "We can do the engineering, but we need your cooperation. We are only part of the solution."

"Don't prejudge our intents," added Daniel O'Brien, an MWRA engineer. "The planning for this began in May, 1986 and the decision will be finalized in May, 1988. The first output of our study is due in February.

"There is time, he said, before the MWRA board of directors makes its decision in May, for the public to have input."

The cost of the study, he noted, already has increased from $2.5 million to $5 million following public outcry for more information.

"There is the question of balancing the cost of the project with quality of life," O'Brien commented, "just as when you go to town meeting and choose the number of officers to have on your police force, you certainly must take cost into account.

"It is the same process at our agency," he said. "Cost will be one of many criteria in choosing the discharge location."

According to MWRA plans, wastewater will be discharged at the end of a large pipeline buried 200 to 300 feet below the ocean floor and stretching four to nine miles in length. It has been compared in size to the Callahan Tunnel.

John Gall, an engineering consultant to the MWRA from Camp, Dresser and McKee, told the throng that the MWRA must meet the water quality requirements of state agencies and the federal Environmental Protection Agency to protect the coastline and minimize stress on local marine species.

The inner harbor sites near Hull and Nahant under consideration for wastewater outfall, he explained, are subject to east-west tidal influences, while the outside locations are broadly influenced by the currents of Massachusetts Bay.

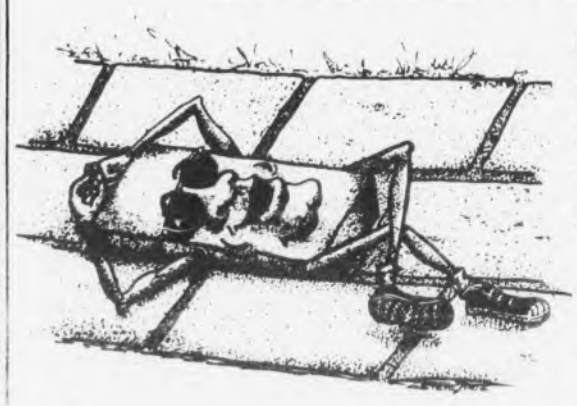
The authority's studies of currents, ecology and biology of the region are buttressed by studies going back 10 years, Gall said.

Despite MWRA assurances, citizens and members of the coalition argued that the studies are incomplete and they asked for coalition representation in the decision-making process.

"I think it is a credit to the people of the South Shore that there are more than 150 people here on a beautiful August night," said Selectman John Silva of Hull, speaking for the coalition. "As you may know, most of the communities in our group are not members of the MWRA, even though most of them have shoreline on Massachusetts Bay.

"Because we are not part of the service system," he told the MWRA representatives, "we have not, to date, had a role in helping to plan the cleanup of Boston Harbor. We request the opportunity to participate in a formal way."

Silva noted the coalition feels there is a "clear need for valid scientific data and analyses, including a year's baseline study before an outfall siting decision is made. The site should be that which least disturbs the coastal and marine resources."



The effluent, he added, should "at least" meet the requirements of the federal Clean Waters Act.

Silva said the coalition is concerned that the court-established schedule precludes proper analysis and informed decision making. "The outfall and treatment decisions must be driven by sound environmental planning, and not construction costs."

Calling for flexibility and a broad-based funding program spread out over time, Silva said the coalition "asks that you choose the most environmentally sound

Cleaning up the So. Shore coast

outfall and treatment alternatives," while the coalition works in the legislative forum to build support "for a more comprehensive program for this critical endeavor."

Selectman John MacMahon of Marshfield registered his town's opposition to the project, saying the MWRA ought not to install the outfall pipe until the Deer Island treatment plant is constructed. And then, it should run at least 20 miles out to sea.

"You should be conducting long-term environmental impact studies," he told the MWRA representatives. "I see no logic in polluting one body of water to clean up another. In fact, I would interpret such an act as an assault on Marshfield's identity as a town."

The site off Allerton Point was of specific concern to Selectman James Gallagher of Cohasset. "I can't understand why an engineer would want to dig 6.7 miles to locate an outfall pipe two-and-a-half miles off land. Why don't you go straight out? The selectmen of Cohasset would love to see it go nine miles out."

Looking at the map of proposed sites, he added, "You want to put a 17-foot wide pipe in that close? C'mon! 500 million gallons per day? That's wicked scary!"

Selectman David Vogler of Duxbury noted that although his town is 35 to 40 miles from Hull, it has 38 miles of coastline and enjoys one of the least polluted harbors. "Our town is interested in protecting that resource," he said, in support of the coalition's position.

"The town of Scituate," noted Selectman Gerald Dwight, "is concerned for many reasons. All I know is, Hull is where it shouldn't be. I am concerned not only for Scituate, but for our neighboring towns on the south and north shores.

"The coast is a God-given attribute," he added. "In Scituate, we have a fishing industry we are very proud of."

Dwight noted Scituate people already are concerned with a moratorium. "We want to clean up our mess, we don't want to add to it."

Dwight's boardmate Richard Bowen added a dramatic flair to the discussion. Before he spoke, he placed a plastic bag bulging with plastic tampon applicators on a table in front of Levy and the engineers.

"I support a cleanup" he commented. "But is this really a cleanup? Or is it more like when you tell a kid to go clean up his room and he shoves everything under the bed?"

Bowen said he is opposed to the state's plan if it will add more of Boston's debris to Scituate's beaches. "It took me just 20 minutes to collect these," he said, pointing at the bag.

The theatrics were continued by David Kellem of Hull, leader of the group Save Our Beaches, which had many members sporting blue and white T-shirts in the audience.

As Kellem and a young friend, Cory Allen of Hull, stood before the MWRA representatives, he explained, "Cory Allen is what Save Our Beaches is all about. Her generation should be able to grow up and enjoy the beaches of the South Shore.

"Do what is safest for the environment and for the people," he said. "Don't take chances with our lives and our livelihoods. Err on the side of caution."

Kellem then initiated the MWRA representatives into Save Our Beaches, presenting them with T-shirts and drawings Allen and her friends had drawn of clean beaches. "Take these into your homes and into your offices," he urged them.

Speaking for his town of Hull, Silva commented, "The town of Hull enthusiastically supports the cleanup of Boston Harbor. For years, our clam flats, swimming lessons and flounder fishing have become more and more befouled by the open sewer that is Boston Harbor. If you know Hull, then you know I am speaking about the bay side of our narrow and heavily populated peninsula."

He noted that Boston Harbor pollution has just recently begun to creep through Nantasket Roads into around town

☐ Congratulations to Karen, Les, Jennifer, and Timothy Goodman on their new addition to the family! Elizabeth, was born Aug. 2 at the South Shore Hospital, and she weighed 8½ pounds. It sure looks like Elizabeth has a lot of people to give her tons of attention whenever she needs it; isn't that wonderful!

☐ You know how people always say that "men are just boys that have grown tall?" The softball game last week with all of the town officials sure seems to prove that point! In an all-out effort to win their game against Scituate, many casualties resulted!

Assesor James Lagrotteria broke his arm making a play at first base, selectman Rocco Laugelle jammed his finger and was sporting a wrapped hand; Dick Barrow (recreation commissioner) and Jack Worley (recreation director) both have bad backs.

As the somewhat depleted team goes to bat this Sunday, we hope that they don't feel that they have to "win at all costs", because there won't be a team!

Those good sports are: Carol Oteri, Bill McAuliffe, Ron Goodwin, Joe Godzick, Charlie Stover, Tony Fasciano, Richard Yocum, Jim Gallagher, Bobby Barrow, Don Staszko, Terry Duggan, A.J. Antoine, Paul Laugelle, Chartis Langmaid, Lenny Davis, Cliff Mitman and Martha Gjesteby. Continue your winning ways guys and gals, safely!

☐ Clark Chatterton, Paul Fiori, Rocco Laugelle, Jack Lynch, Bob Magner and Bernie Mulcahy are at it again! Its time for the annual Jimmy Fund Tournament plans, and they are well underway. It is to be held Monday, Sept. 21 at The Hatherly Country Club in North Scittuate with the shotgun starting time to be set at 1 p.m. The donation this year will be $50 per person (tax deductible) with trophies and prizes galore and super raffle after your delectable dinner. The fee also includes lunch at the halfway house, hors d'ouevres and lots of fun. If you wish to play, contact any committee member for an application form. If you cannot play, but wish to support this effort, why not make donation to the raffle?

That committee consits of Janet Figueiredo, Pat Laugelle, Polly Litchfield, Jeanne McAuliffe, Izzie Salvador and Mimi Chatterton. Your donation will be acknowledged the night of the raffle (it too is tax deductible) and it sure is the biggest part of the fundraising effort. The Jimmy Fund is such a worthy cause, so be sure that you do share for this tournament. See any committee member for more details.

Chartis Langmaid, who works in the Cohasset Treasurer's office, caught the recent softball game against Scituate officials. Umpire John Lennon certainly was pleased with the upcoming pitch.

☐ For any of you would-be applicants to Bowdoin College, be sure to check the hand book that they send...in it your sure will see a familiar face. Bobby Shultz at bat during a baseball game.

☐ Selectman Jim Gallagher sure had a busy weekend last week! His daughter's wedding was last Saturday (his house and grounds looked so pretty!), followed by his at-bats for the Town Team! Sure hope he makes the selectman's meeting this week, and that he stays awake! That's a lot of activity for one weekend!

☐ The Chatterton family has a little news for you this week. Their relatives from Hawaii, Arcas and Zane Aikau, are here for a three week visit!If you want to learn how to body surf, follow them to Nantasket Beach, where they were showing swimmers how to do so last week. They are super boys, and a pleasure to be around.

☐ To all of the new students that have entered our town, remember that school registration is being held from 9 a.m. to noon from Monday, Aug. 24 through Friday, Aug 28. Phone for an appointment at the school that you are to enter: Joseph Osgood (grades K-3) 383-6117; Deer Hill School (grades 4-6), 383-6115; and Cohasset High School (grades 7-12), 383-6102.

☐ A hearty Ahoy to the Sailing Club, their efforts are sure noticed, take a peek at their enrollment! There are 141 sailors enrolled; that sure is something to be proud of! Looks like the sailing tradition that Cohasset has established over the years will continue with flying colors.

☐ Last, but certainly not least, is an added comment on the fine article about Ron Rawson. Ron and Ruth Rawson are such an established part of our town now we hate to think of them not making a daily appearance at the Music Circus. Clark and I have had the privilege of working with both of them for their 20 year stay, and not enough can be said about them and their efforts. Thank you for all of the things that you have done for the town, starting with all of the improvements on the Circus and the grounds; the care which you have taken in supporting all of the town's various organizations, and thank you for being our friends.

As was stated in Jane Lane's article, the Music Circus will go on with the new producer, who is said to be a grand one. As they say in show biz, "He sure will be a hard act to follow". Ron and Ruth Rawson are a couple that one feels privileged knowing, and the whole town is lucky to have been touched by them.

☐ Here's hoping that Bart Weisenfluh recovers rapidly from his recent foot surgery. He had both feet operated on and will be in casts until mid-September. Knowing him, he won't be down for long!

Give me a call with your news. . .

Esplanade condo manager

Cohen Properties, Inc., a Boston-based development and property management firm, recently announced that Gordon S. Hislop of Cohasset Senior Vice President of Development, will be in charge of the company's newest residental offering, The Esplanade condominiums in East Cambridge.

As Project Manager, Hislop will ensure that all of the elements involved in the development of the residences, including design, financing, construction, marketing and sales, are successfully integrated.

Prior to his work at Cohen Properties, Hislop was employed by Urban Investment & Development, where he served as the Project Manager for the Marriott Hotel and the residences at Copley Place.

CSB second quarter results

Cohasset Savings Bank reported net income of $130,000 for the quarter ended June 30, 1987, the first financial reporting period since the Bank's conversion from a mutual to a stock form of organization.

Delays resulting from complications in completing the substantially oversubscribed stock offering, as well as non-recurring expenses, an increase in the Bank's provision for possible loan losses and a decrease in non-interest income, contributed to preventing the Bank from matching the income of $201,000 achieved in the second quarter of 1986. Management expects that the second half of 1987 will show a significant improvement as the funds from the conversion will be fully invested over that time period.

"We have identified non-recurring expenses during the first six months, which significantly affected net income," Donald E. Bates, President and CEO, stated "Some of these were related to a changeover in our computer service bureau and our accounting system. The delay in completing the coversion to stock form meant that our ability to invest the funds received was severly limited."

Cohasset Savings Bank is a 142-year-old community thrift institution with offices in Cohasset and Scituate, serving an area of Massachusetts' South Shore that has witnessed an active real estate market as well as rising personal income and low unemployment.

As of June 30, 1987, it had assets of $59,840,000 an annualized increase of 18.87 percent over the December 31, 1986 figure of $54,680,000.

Howley new sales manager

The Niles Company, Inc., a Boston full service real estate firm, recently named John G. Howley sales manager of River Crossing, a 120 unit luxury condominium residence on the banks of the Weir River. River Crossing is a development of The Acorn Group, Inc. of Cambridge.

Howley said its location on the Hull-Hingham line and close proximity to the commuter boat service to Boston are major assets. "River Crossing will have spectacular ocean and river views, and expansive private balconies. It will also have 24 hour security, assigned garage parking and a full-fitness health center, which will include a year round swimming pool.

"The initial response to River Crossing has been excellent," Howley added. "In fact, prior to the start of construction, thirty percent of the units have been sold.

Howley is a resident of nearby Cohasset and has been an active real estate broker in the South Shore area. He is a member of the Plymouth County Board of Realtors and the Massachusetts Board of Realtors.

He has a Bachelor of Science Degree in Business Administration from Boston College and a Masters Degree in Business Administration from the University of Detroit. He is active in the Alumni Associations of both schools.

According to Howley, the one bedroom residences at River Crossing range in size from 886 to 1,008 square feet and the two bedroom residences vary from 1,176 to 1,432 square feet. Units are priced from $145,000 to $305,000.

The on site sales office is located at 333 George Washington Boulevard and is open Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on weekends from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Construction is expected to begin this summer, with an expected occupancy date for the fall of 1988.

On housing

Real Estate is a touchy subject for a lot of people in our community. Cohasset has dug a hole for itself; much deeper than the Cohasset Heights Landfill. A hole that has the potential to undermine the entire infrastructure of this town.

Low income housing has the connotation to many residents as being along the lines of slums for poverty stricken city dwellers. What is hardly considered, however, is the prospect of living life in a monetarily divided population which is at the very least, unappealing.

A town where the owner of the local gas station, the third grade teacher and the firefighter cannot afford to live near, let alone in, still might qualify as a town, but certainly not as a community.

Oh sure, it is great for the kids to grow up, and get out and see the real world. The city is crowded because of the many opportunities that it has to offer.

Even if that person couldn't really afford it, would it be too much to ask if the person wanted to stay in Cohasset because of his or her love for the historical charm that our New England town has to offer. Would it be asking a lot if the person wanted to stay here for their personal ties to family and friends,and be able to remain in Cohasset?

We realize that any vacancies in any low income housing will go to the people of the community because of the slightly family biased ways of our local government. That is not a cheap shot at Cohasset politicians either; it is important to take care of ones own. Our town government realizes that and we voted them in. We will continue to vote them in too because we don't want to change, or more accurately, we don't want our property values to drop.

Is this greedy? We don't think so. Cohasset is a beautiful town, there is no reason to turn it into a honky-tonk for cape-bound tourists. It is a somewhat selfish concept, however. When you break it down to a choice in priorities between family friends and loved ones versus property values, we believe that Cohasset has them straight. No question about it.

What Cohasset as a whole must begin to understand is that any and all low income housing in Cohasset is for our community. It is for the kid in the Cohasset High School Class of 1992 who five more years down the line decides that he wants to pursue a career teaching mathmatics to the children of Cohasset in his former high school.

Low income housing is for the firefighter with a wife, two kids and oppressive car payments. He could probably earn more money fighting fires in Boston but as a native to our town he feels a tie to the people that he is protecting.

Low income housing is not substandard housing. In fact, low income housing, in Cohasset, would be high income housing in many communities. Low income housing is not ugly and it is not always an apartment building.

Low income housing could be within walking distance of stores and bus lines unlike the proposed housing development isolated off of 3A on Evergreen Lane.

Low income housing is a place that people can live in with pride. We want our firefighters, our teachers as well as other local tradesmen to live just as happily as our doctors,lawyers and executives. When it comes right down to it a good days work is a good days work.

The community produced from people living, working and sharing together in our small town is one of the best things that we have going for us. An economically divided community is ugly. A key element in our society would be abandon in favor of property values. We would be cheating ourselves of something much more important, a community.

Low income housing is desperately needed in Cohasset and it is ultimately to our benefit. Let's get on the ball.

Murray's Memos

A new calendar for the legislature

by State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray
Special to the Mariner

Commentary

A referendum petition recently filed with the Massachusetts Attorney General may be the voice voters have been searching for in order to shout their disapproval over the way the state legislature operates.

The petition was filed by the Committee for a More Effective Legislature. As the name implies, the petition's goal is to do something about the stop and go, dragged out operation that passes as a full-time legislature in the Commonwealth.

For most of the 1980's the Massachusetts Legislature has run year-round. A check of the actual work done in formal session, however, shows that a hoax is being played upon the citizens of the Baystate. The figures indicate that, over the last three years, the House met in formal session for the equivalent of only 14 40-hour weeks. The Senate met for only six 40-hour weeks.

This phantom legislature doesn't serve the state or the people we, as state lawmakers, were elected to serve. We would all be better off with a limited legislative session that would allow representatives to keep one foot in the real world. It would also open the doors to political office for many people with careers or occupations that don't allow them to be year-round legislators.

Too many representatives now list their formal occupation as "legislator". Some members of the General Court have never held a job outside the public sector. They often overlook some of the real, critical needs of people simply because they've never worked out there in the "real" world.

A limited legislative session is not a radical idea. Right now 32 states have constitutional limits on their sessions. The New York Legislature, with roughly as many bills and very similiar issues as those in Massachusetts, still managed to finish its 1986 session in July.

A limited legislative session, whether six, seven, or even eight months, makes sense. The effort by the Committee for a More Effective Legislature makes sense, and it deserves your support. If the group is able to gather the approximate 53,000 signatures required, the proposal will go before joint legislative sessions in 1988 and 1989.

If it gets 50 votes each time, it would be placed on the ballot as an amendment to the state constitution in 1990. There's plenty of time for a full and rigorous debate on this issue through that process. But, the process won't get rolling unless the petition effort by the Committee for a More Effective Legislature succeeds.

If you're interested in more information on why a limited legislative session is a good idea and how it would work, please drop me a note.

Informational packets on a limited legislative session are available from C.A.M.E.L., the Committee for a More Effective Legislature, at 23 Province Street, Suite 853, Boston, Mass. 02108.

King Street traffic plan unacceptable . . .

Letters

(The following letter was read to selectmen Monday night)

Thank you, etc.

Since our last meeting with you, the Citizens of King Street have become even more firmly committed to protecing our narrow country road from the increasing volume of high-speed through-traffic.

Although you are familiar with our many deep concerns, we are going to make every effort tonight to confine our remarks to the subject of this meeting, which is: The proposed traffic light pattern in front of the new Stop and Shop market plaza which has been presented here.

What we are seeing on this proposed traffic pattern is exactly what we have most feared: that is, the actual encouragement of traffic to diverge onto King Street. Impatient motorists will now seek to avoid not only the existing lights at the Pond Street and Beechwood Street intersections, but even more crucially, to avoid the new set of lights at the very entrance of our street, with their rate of speed unchecked.

This plan would prove to be an exacerbation of the already intolerable traffic volume and speeding problems on our narrow, rural road.

On the proposed plan that we have seen tonight, the right fork cut-off onto King Street from Route 3A traveling south, has been made even more gradual, even more inviting to all those motorists headed south rather than into the market plaza. These drivers can very easily evaluate the line of cars waiting at the lights, and well before they even reach the lights can veer off onto this narrow country road. Traveling as they are, at 50 MPH, the posted speed on Route 3A, they will hit the King Street down-grade at a frightening degree of speed. It happens constantly already. This plan will make the problem immeasurably worse.

What is totally missing from this traffic light pattern, and what we cannot condone, is any means of bringing cars to a complete halt before entering our narrow road.

As it stands now, this proposed plan is totally unacceptable to those citizens who are most seriously affected by it, and who are directly endangered by it. We respectfully ask the Board that they deny approval of this traffic plan tonight, and await such time as a safer and more rational design can be presented.

As the board knows, our group hopes to insert a warrant article for next October's special Town Meet-the estimates for the company's projects from Lawrence to the mid-Cape. "Actually," Panico said, "This community center job is one of the smallest we do. Right now, we also have a million dollar commercial building going in Whitman."

Panico's background includes a degree in mechanical engineering from Northeastern University. Her first professional break was with Gordon Hurtwitz and Merrill Diamond, who have since become the highly-successful corporation known as Parencorp. She has also worked with the Arthur D. Little Co., where she was given a Carnegie Foundation grant to study the integration of solar energy with convential construction. Finally, after working with other engineering and construction companies, including stints as project manager at a fossil fuel plant construction site, Panico made the jump to Pullman Corp.

"This is a very good opportunity for me. I'm not saying I will never start my own company. But I'm a very substantial person in this company," she said.

Company owner Carl Fletcher, she added, is a man who believes in her ability. "He has always treated me like I can do the job, and I do. He gives a set of prints and say, 'go do it' and he knows it will be done right. He knows I'm a very capable person."

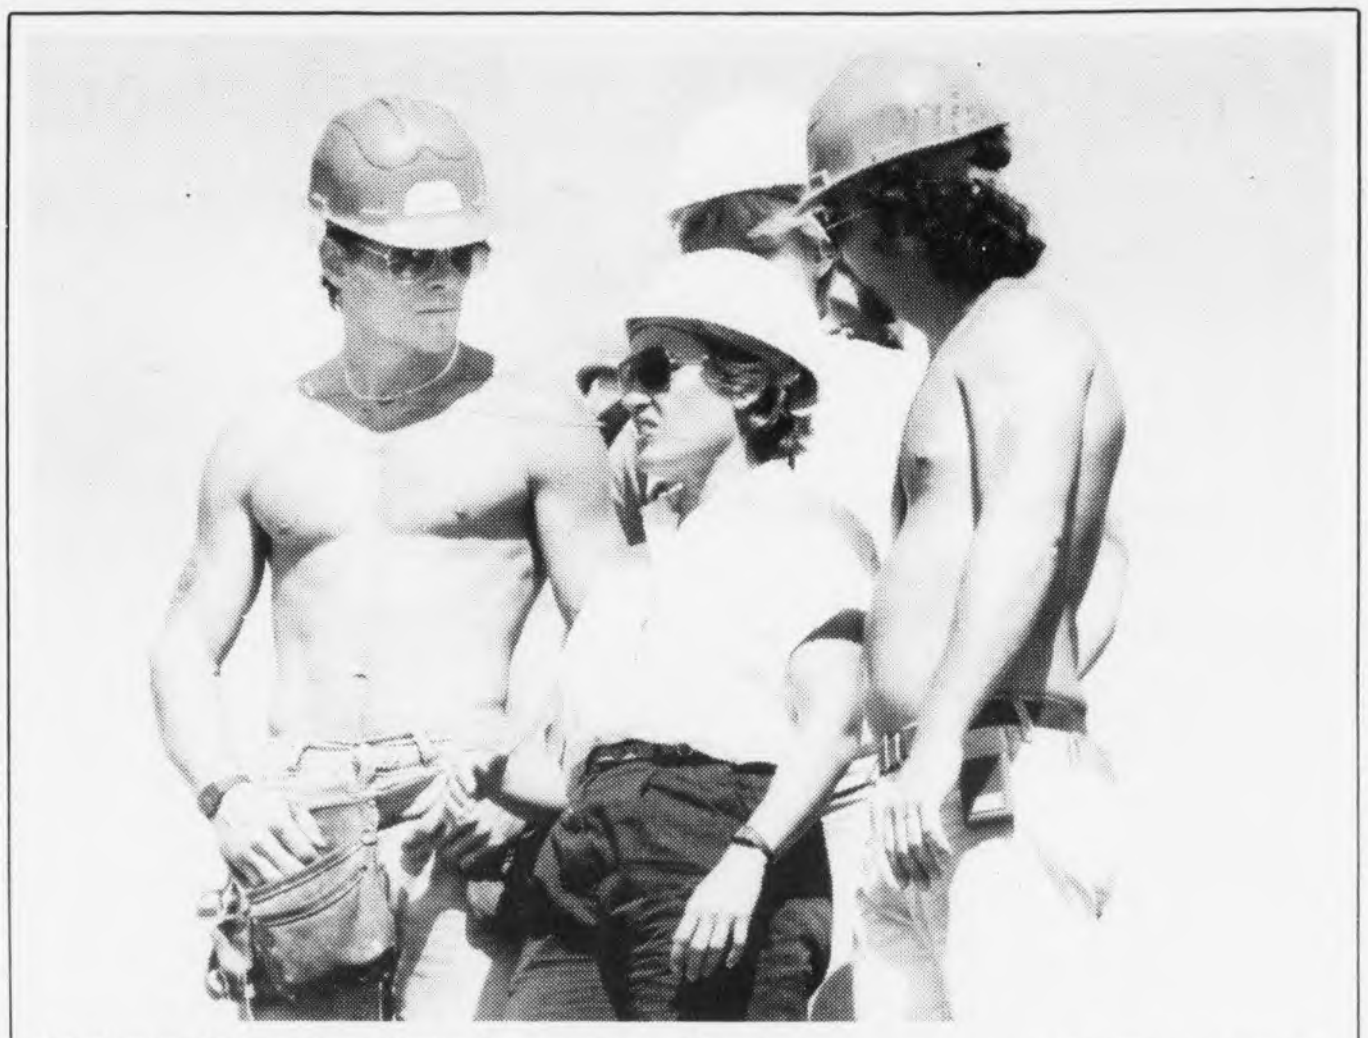
'Like any good contractor, you have to know how to compensate for the inevitable problems that will come up. You simply compensate and then proceed accordingly.'

Panico was the oldest of three children growing up in Maryland. Her father was in the contracting business until his retirement, Her younger brother remains in the business.When she was 13 years old, Panico began working alongside her father. "My days of playing were over," she recalled, noting that her father had to fight the local school system in 1964 when his daughter insisted on taking a course in mechanical drawing rather than home economics. Subsequently, she was one of the first female high school students in the nation to substitute the previously all-male course for the traditional female class.

"I also know how to cook very well,"she quickly added.

Although her father wanted his daughter to pursue a career in medicine, Panico said she could not see herself "sitting behind a desk, or working inside a building all day. I love being outside, regardless of the weather. I like that freedom that contracting affords me," she said. "I am the boss and I'm here by my own choice."

Construction, she explained, is a cooperative business. While she is supervising carpenters on her own crew, Panico must ccoordinate electricians, plumbers, crane operators, cement contractors and the painters. "That's the hardest part about the job. But you do whatever it takes to get the job done, and done right," she said.



The community center project includes the addition of a 4,000 square-foot gymnasium, three classrooms on two levels, a function room and bathrooms. The most difficult part of the job thus far, the project manager stated, was stabilizing the old part of the original building with the new addition. One section of the old building which will abut the new, was in poor condition and had to be shored up before any new construction could occur.

"We got behind the job there," Panico explained, "and it ran us a little longer than expected. But like any good contractor, you have to know how to compensate for the inevitable problems that will come up. You simply compensate and then proceed accordingly."

Panico said supervising a crew of strong-willed males is easy, once they realize she's the boss. "The guys here are very good and the ones that aren't I got rid of. We talk the same language, tell the same jokes - that's the way it is in this business. Some might say it's crude, but it's just a certain aggressive attitude. That's good in this business," she said, adding that the men on the work crews have kept the girl-watching whistles in Cohasset Village to a minimum.

The community center project is proceeding on target, she noted. It should be ready for occupancy by September 21. In the meantime, it may mean long workdays and some weekends for the construction crew.

"Whatever it takes, we'll be finished on time. That's my job here, and that's what I'll do," she said.

ing which would prohibit southbound access to King Street at the 3A intersection, and would make King Street one-way in a northerly direction between Pond Street and Chief Justice Cushing Highway.

We hope to come before you soon to discuss this and to seek your support. We feel that this compromise can solve some, if not all of our dangerous traffic problems.

However, optimistic as we may be, we dare not assume at this time that the one-way proposal will automatically come to pass, and traffic safety must be protected in case it does not. The crucial 3A intersection must be made safe now, no matter what happens in the future.

Not only is there real danger to us, the residents of King Street, but to the increasing volume of motorists engendered by the new plaza, who will be encouraged by this plan to use narrow King Street as a high-speed short cut.

We hope that you will join with us in our deep concern for the safety of residents and motorists alike, and request a new and more comprehensive traffic design.

Thank you.

Japanese students learn about America

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

Sarah Delima and her family want to hide Terumi Hayashi's passport so she can't go back to Japan. Fifteen other Cohasset families feel the same way.

In a program initiated by the Cultural Homestay Institute 16 Japanese college age women have been living and studying in Cohasset for the last month.

"It is a great chance for them to practice conversational English," said Margot Cheel a host parent and member of the Homestay staff, "they don't get a chance to speak it there."

Jill Sudduth leads a conversation class for the Japanese students 3 days a week at the Congregational church. Each week the students take a day trip to local sights and two days a week they take a half day trip to local attractions.

"We are here mostly to learn about the culture," said Fumiko Matusumoto of Nagasaki City, Japan "

"They don't like to study to much and they hate homework," said Suddath "but they practice their English pretty hard."

"It wasn't planned that it would be all girls, it just worked out that way," continued Suddath.

The girls talked about pizza, ice cream and Tom Cruise.

"Most Americans our age might not work as hard," explained Mikido Uchiyama. All Japanese students are required to take "the examination" after college that almost absolutely determines their place in the Japanese society.

In Japan we do not stay out as late," said Mikkiko Uchiyama, " it is very strict in Japan. Also," continued Mikkiko, " people here all have a car, there aren't as many car owners in Japan, maybe one per family."

The students have participated in visits to Plymouth, Boston and Cambridge as well as local hotspots like Nantasket Beach.

"Everyone bought souveniers at Harvard," said Suddath. Reeboks,Levi's and sweat shirts have been the most popular items.

"They love to go shopping," said Mark Facey a host family member. "Emi fits in really well, if we don't understand each other we just keep repeating ourselves and we eventually figure it out. She is very easy to along with."

"Initially, we didn't volunteer because we thought we were to busy," said Sarah Delima,"But we decided to and Terumi has been a absolute joy."

Delima has four children ranging in age from 9 to 16 years old,.

"She really enjoys spending time with all of them. It has been facsinating watching her grow, at first she was very shy, the Japanese by nature are not very bombastic by nature, We watched her sense of humor come to the forefront. She has a sweetness we've all come to love. There is a lot of noise and laughter in our house, we all tease each other a lot."

"They have had so many activities," continued Delima, "sometimes she won't go because she loves spending time with us, bless her heart."

Shinobu Takeuchi from Hiroshima Japan has been staying with the Curry family on Aaron River Road. "Since I came here I have been nick named Snow Boots because of the similarity of the pronounciation."

Asked about her home city Snow Boots replied."We don't feel so badly about it (the bomb) anymore. The effects are still there, we live about three miles from where the bomb landed. "

"I feel very fortunate that we were able to do this," said Jean Lennon of of Tad Lane. "I can't say enough about Atsumi , she gets along with my son and my daughter just fine, they do a lot together. Her English has really improved, we all talk very fast. She loves the food. She just went down to Salem sightseeing with my daughter and some of her friends and they went to a Chinese retaurant. They had a great time."

"They love to go to the beach," Lennon said. "They are all extremely polite. It must reflect the on the way they are brought up. They are all very respectful and they appreciate everything so much. I have found this to be very worthwhile. I have a new life long friend, I'm sure we will write to each other often."

The girls are studying various subjects in college in Japan from Culture to Physics. They like rock n roll , especially Whitney Huston. They have learned to sing American songs and devour pizza.

"There are so many races of people, we are all the same in Japan," said one of the youg women of her observations of her trip to New York.

After a wing ding Sayonara party on Thursday the young women will be returning to Japan with many happy memories.

Cleaning up the South Shore coast

the open ocean, periodically washing up on Hull and Cohasset beaches. "So does the town of Hull enthusiastically support the cleanup of Boston Harbor? You bet we do!"

But Silva lamented, "Where are we today? We are told that a site two-and-a-half miles northeast of Allerton Point, Hull is one of the primary areas under consideration for the location of a sewage outfall pipe the size of the Callahan Tunnel, dumping over 500 million gallons of effluent per day from MWRA communities as far away as Ashland and Framingham.

"We are told that everyone has to do their part in cleaning up Boston Harbor, and that the 'not in my backyard' mentality is not a viable reason to oppose the outfall siting process," he added.

"We, the town of Hull that has endured the degradation of Boston Harbor on a daily basis on our bayside beaches and in our bays for years are standing astounded and helpless as a huge state bureaucracy unveils plans that could possibly destroy our oceanside beaches, our economy, our industry, our quality of life, and we are told that our opposition is nothing more than the 'not in my backyard mentality?'"

Silva urged the MWRA to put its pipe in the most ecologically and environmentally sound location, without regard to political and financial pressures.

"We in Hull and throughout the South Shore wait with a mixture of fascination and horror as this production moves to its final act," he said. "Is it really possible that the MWRA, its member cities and towns and the federal government will clean up Boston Harbor, while playing a game of Russian roulette with the North or South shores?

"If the location nine miles out to sea is the location that will least effect residents of the commonwealth, and if financial considerations are not driving this process, then why isn't this the number one option of the MWRA?" he queried.

"The South Shore is awake!" Silva proclaimed. "We know what is going on and we want to participate as allies. We will participate regardless.

"Listen to us," he pleaded. "Hear us, heed us. This is an emotional issue to all of us because it is a threat to our homes, our economy and our quality of life.

"You have a monsterous task before you," he told the MWRA representatives. "For everyone's sake, do it right, because if you do it wrong, if you rush forward in your court-imposed timeline, surrounded by your multi-million dollar bureaucracy and you are ultimately wrong, then it will be too late and we will all be paying a terrifying penalty for countless generations."

So. Shore officials yearn to stop traffic snarls. . .

By John Magadieu
Mariner staff

As communities on the South Shore burst with growth and traffic snarls local roads, state agencies are devising ways to deal with the dilemma.

Members of the South Shore coalition heard about plans Aug. 11 for the expansion of Route 3 between Weymouth and Duxbury; the highway will be growing by another lane northbound and southbound.

Robert Joseph and Robert Lapsley of the state Department of Public Works admitted the project is already six months behind schedule, but they expect to have a draft environmental report in by the end of 1987.

Joseph explained, the state DPW plans to utilize the median strip to add a northbound and southbound lane along the 12-mile stretch from where the lanes presently merge in Weymouth to a point just north of the North River.

"The capacity problem on Route 3 is self-evident," Joseph noted. "We have looked at all kinds of alternatives - express bus lanes, commuter boats. The most viable option is to add capacity to Route 3.

"This didn't just come out of the woods," he said. "There have been 10 years of study; we need more capacity and we need it more now than we did in 1977."

While engineers work on the environmental study, Joseph noted, the DPW is in the pre-design stage, but will come out with an expansion plan soon.

"We can only work with what we have in the right of way," Lapsley commented. "That's why we're using the median, rather than addressing the right side of the road."

Joseph noted it will be difficult to show the public a cross-section of the construction because it is "atypical all along the way." The construction will vary with the topography and the width of the median.

DPW officials are anxious to get on with the project because when it is finished, drivers will no longer be allowed to drive in the breakdown lane. Presently, motorists may drive in the breakdown lane during peak traffic hours; it is a legal situation of which neither the DPW nor the state police approve.

"I guess we've been lucky, only two have been killed so far," Lapsley said sarcastically.

"Many bridges will have to be replaced," Joseph said of the project. "There was a plan in the 1940s to widen the road; it would have cost them $80,000 then to put in the pilings."

Lapsley noted this plan will not solve all of the Route 3 traffic woes. "There will be more traffic in 2010, but the commuter rail will help. I expect the next step after this is to do an environmental study all the way down to the Sagamore circle.

Citizens will be given the opportunity to have input into the present widening plan early next year, Lapsley said.

The biggest impasse to widening Route 3, Joseph said, is the potential adverse impact on water quality, though another tough problem to overcome will be getting the public to accept the loss of green space in the name of highway expansion.

"We could lose a lot of the median," he explained. At the narrowest spot, the median is 50 feet wide and will most likely look like the section of highway that runs through Braintree. The widest section of median is 300 feet, but that is only for a short stretch. Much of the median strip is in the 100-foot wide range.

After the planning is completed, construction should take about two years, Lapsley said. A rough estimate of the project cost is $40 million.

In other business, the coalition heard from Edward Bates and William Massicott of the Metropolitan Area Planning Council. The MAPC has been working to help communities procure and manage funds for maintenance and reconstruction of local roads.

"MAPC has researched changes in the average expenditures for local roads," Bates said, "and we show a shortfall in what communities are spending.

"In 1980," he explained, "Massachusetts enacted legislation limiting local property taxation. As a result, local governments have had to be very selective in spending local funds." Many have deferred road maintenance in favor of other needs, such as police and protection and education.

The penalty for detering road repairs will cost towns four or five times as much as it would have been had roads been kept up over time.

Eighty percent of the roads in Massachusetts are municipally maintained ways. According to an MAPC survey of 13 area towns: 22 percent of the roads are in excellent shape; 34 percent of the roads are in good shape; 25 percent of the roads are in fair shape and 19 percent of the roads are in poor shape.

"It costs $259,000 per mile to completely reconstruct a failed road," Bates said.

Coalition members were disappointed to learn the MAPC could find no study that shows the effects of commuter rail service on a locality.

"One thing we hear from some on the South Shore is that the train will make property values go down," said William Grimes of Hingham. "Proponents say that's ridiculous. If we had empirical data, we could support our case."

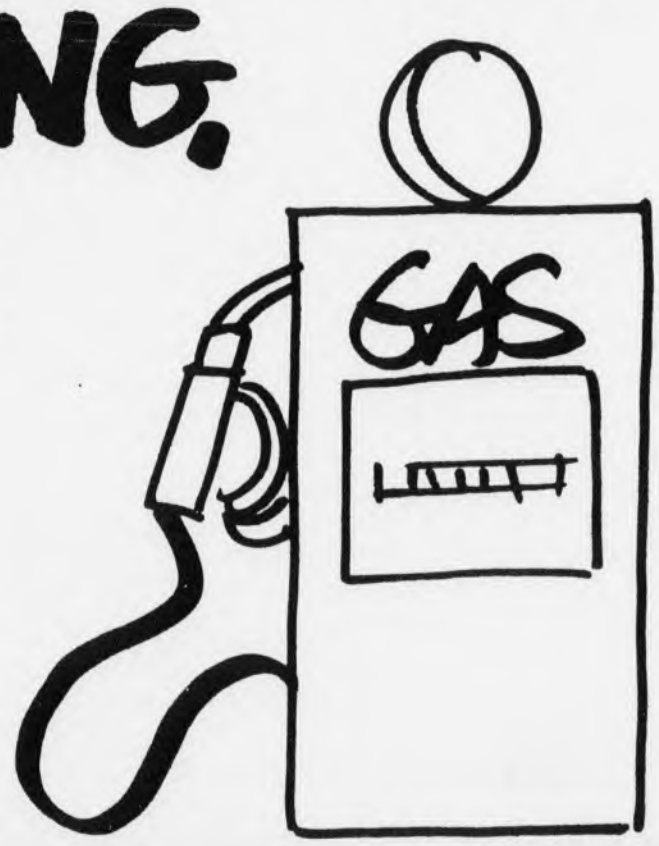
"It would be very difficult to isolate property values as a result of commuter rail," Massicott explained, "especially if there had been growth previously."

"Accessibility is always a big factor in property value," Bates said, "but highway accessibility, buses and conventional trains, such as the Red Line, are more influential. Commuter rail is almost never considered."

DeVito, a top swimmer

Lauren DeVito of Cohasset leads a list of five members of the Greater Boston Swim Club who were recently named to the New England Swimming top ten list for the '86-'87 season.

DeVito, in her third season with GBSC, qualified for the team in the 100 yard freestyle, 100 yard individual medley, and the 50 yard breaststroke.



Swimming is a real family affair for the DeVito's as Lauren's sister Robin also swims on the team and their brother Kevin is currently part of the GBSC lesson program. Lauren recently scored three firsts and a third at the South Shore Swim League Championships.

Other members of the Greater Boston Swim Club in the N.E. top ten include Mike Holland in the 200 yard backstroke and the 100 meter butterfly. Mike is also a YMCA Long Course All-American in four events. Matt McAuliffe scored with a third in the 50 meter breaststroke as did Janice Silk of Milton in the 50 yard freestyle.

The highest finisher was Ian Callander who placed second in the 50 meter backstroke, as well as fifth in both the 50 and 100 meter backstrokes.

The Greater Boston Swim Club will be starting the winter season on Sept. 21. The team practices are held at the R. J. Murphy Community School in Neponset. For more information contact Steve Quimby at 583-6581.

Worship news . . .

Cohasset Baptist Church

Come and open God's word Sunday at 9:30 a.m. at the Rotary Club across from the police station.

Our music leader is John Cone. Come and worship the King of Kings with us. We are planning to start a mid-week Bible soon.

Coffee and donuts will be served after service.

Second Congregational Church

News of the Parish:

Music Director search is making slow but sure progress. With three other area churches looking for a director, the competition is rather stiff! And summer is not an easy time to contact people for committee meetings, or interviews. We've held two interviews to date and are hoping for at least a couple more. Please help spread the word and send candidates via the church office to the attention of the Music Committee. Members of the committee are Andrea McNeill, Vivien Bobo, Carol Proodian, Deacon Bruce Doten, Moderator John Campbell and Gary Ritts.

Moving day has been set for Isabelle Wilson from her home on Spindrift Lane to her new home in Norwell, where she will be joined by her son and daughter-in-law and family. Let us keep her in our prayers, give her a call, and pay a visit during this trying time of transition.

Special Thanks

For all those who helped keep the church going while this minister was away. To Muriel and Frank Wheelwright - always there, smoothing out the wrinkles; to Doug Wheeler and Peter Guild for the pulpit leadership; to John Campbell for conducting early services and to Rev. Alan Copithorne for standing by on-call. It's humbling and comforting to realize how capable and talented the lay leadership of this church is.

The first annual Blueberry festival was a great success. Many thanks to the wonderful cooks who provided pies, cakes, shortcake, sundaes, salads, etc. Special thanks to Carl and Jane Chessia of Scituate who provided the most interesting talk and slides about Thomas Lawson and the Lawson Estate. About 80 people enjoyed the program.

Sunday service brought a special treat for both the congregation and three of our old and dear friends. Hattie Litchfield and Annie Crane came to visit from the Cardigan Nursing home and Jessie Hyland from her home.

It was a special treat when Master Caleb Miller of Sommers Point New Jersey brought his mother Donna Miller to church. Caleb is pastor and Mrs. Halls grandson also attended.

Special music was provided this week by Davia Litchfield.

Board to sample Brass Kettle Brook

By Kelly Williams
Mariner correspondent

The board of health will ask Webb-Norfolk Conveyor to take water samples from the wetlands and Brass Kettle Brook because of high levels of contaminents found in the area.

"I think we should sample those wetlands to determine that there is not ground level contamination," Health Board member William Baird said at the board's Monday night meeting. "This indicates there is still some contamination there."

Baird was referring to a recent study of water samples from wells near the Webb-Norfolk Conveyor company, off King Street, which still show high levels of volatile chemicals that could be flowing into the brook and the surrounding wetlnds.

The board of health and the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering ordered Norfolk Conveyer to clean up and conduct water samples in the area after barrels containing hazardous waste were discovered on the property in 1983.

Although recent water samples taken in April showed lower levels of contamination than those taken in 1984, members fear contaminants may be flowing into the brook from surface water.

Health agent Joseph Godzik said testing was difficult in areas because of the lack of water in many of the wells.

According to samples collected May 7 by the Certified Engineering and Testing Company, Inc., the toxic cleaning liquid Trichloroethylene was found as high as 210 parts per billion in the wells.

Samples from surface streams in the area showed a total volatile organic compound concentration of 227 ppb, down from its level of 5,350 ppb recorded in 1983.

Board members said the high concentrations of chemicals found near the site could pose a serious threat to health if it enters the ground water or the nearby stream. They agreed to send a letter to DEQE voicing their concerns and asking that DEQE officials reopen the file to determine the extent of the comtamination. The DEQE closed its clean up file on the Norfolk Conveyor site in January of 1986.

Auto insurance saving tips

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R) 3rd Plymouth District, has distributed to the libraries in her district a pamphlet "Auto Insurance Savings Checklist."

"You can save money on your auto insurance right now by choosing the right deductible," Rep. Murray stated. "Taking advantage of available discounts, eliminating unnecessary coverages and of course driving safety reduces your insurance premium charges," Representative Murray continued, "Some of the important points that show my constituents how to save money on their automobile insurance policies are: some folks drive less than 5000 miles a year which saves 10 percent on the premium, between 5,000 to 7,500 a year saves 5 percent. There is a 20 percent saving if one installs a burglar alarm. Do you need health or disability insurance or do you already have a separate policy? Some folks may not realize that if you are 65 years of age the approximate savings is $150 or 25 percent, she concluded.

Yacht Club defeats Cohasset

For the first time in the 23 year history of the South Shore Swim League, the Scituate Harbor Yacht Club won the championship meet at the Cohasset town pool Saturday, Aug. 15. The final score was Yacht Club, 244, Cohasset Knights of Columbus, 177.

Throughout the meet, Commodore Kevin Callanan enthusiastically cheered on the team and watched the presentation of the traveling silver cup trophy to pool committee chairman and meet director, Jim Logue and coach Wendy Reiners.

Swimmers Tara Gately and Mary Bowker who have both swam at the championships for SHYC since 1979 especially savored the victory and recalled the years when the swim season did not end favorably. Bowker joined teammates, Kristan Gately, Allison Hughes and Todd Twigg in setting individual records at the Cohasset Pool. The girls 16 and under free relay of Gretchen Sulc, Jennifer Lee, Kristan Gately and Mary Bowker also broke a pool record by a considerable margin.

Coaches Wendy Reiners and Elizabeth Foster praised the team effort and were especially pleased in the co-operative spirit in which everyone participated. Jenn Logue, a key 12 and under member suffered a broken wrist before the meet but helped out on land organizing swimmers and relays.

Other members of the roster include: Dave Finnegan, Pat Healey, Brendan Everett, Bill Burns, Mike Welch, Mary Bowker, Tara Gately, Gretchen Sulc, Colleen Burns, Kate Welch, Shannon Pyne, Heather McDonnell, Caroline Hughes, Maggie Finn, Kristan Gately, Jennifer Lee, Charlie Everett, Derek Sulc, Brian Lee, Sean Quirk, Allison Hughes, Amy Bowman, Katie Ayers, Amanda Gouldson, Anne Bowker, Katie Donovan, Merideth Twigg, Erin Gately, A.J. Hunter Safety Course in Hingham

Environmental Police Officer John Comeau will hold a Hunter Safety Course at the Wompatuck State Park Visitor Center located on Union Street, off of Rte. 228 and Free Street in Hingham.

The course is free and meets six evenings from 6:30 to 9 p.m., starting Sept. 9 and continuing through Sept. 29.

Registration will take place at the first class with attendance open to adult men and women, as well as minors over 10 years of age with parental permission.

These hunter safety courses are offered at over fifty locations statewide by the Massachusetts Environmental Police using officers and certified volunteers as instructors.

Graduates, over 15 years old, receive a "Certificate of Competency in the Safe Handling of Firearms" or what is commonly known as a 'Hunter Safety Certificate.' This state certificate serves two legal purposes.

First, it allows young men and women between the ages of 15 and 18 to hunt alone on their first Massachusetts hunting license.

Secondly, this same card is honored by those U.S. states and Canadian provinces which require hunter safety training of both adults and minors in order to purchase a hunting license. Many experienced adults complete the course for that reason.

For additional information on this and other upcoming hunter safety courses, write Hunter Safety, P. O. Box 408, Westminster, MA 01473 or call the program office in Gardner, 727-3623.

Progress shown in King Street traffic light plan

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

A new King Street traffic light plan, if approved, could be the final stumbling block to the building of the new Stop & Shop supermarket on Route 3A.

Two meetings produced a tenative plan for a traffic light which would act as a right angle intersection at the top of King Street.

The plan, according to Robert Sturdy of the planning board, would only allow traffic to enter onto King Street through a sharp right angle traffic light.

Traffic would only be allowed to proceed straight into the Stop and Shop parking lot or left towards Hingham from the light at the end of King Street. A right hand turn would be totaly eliminated.

"This will cut out the ability for cars to go whipping down King Street," said Sturdy.

At last Mondays selectmen's meeting, King Street residents stressed that King Street should be made into a one way street.

"I think that making the street one-way would be a disservice to residents, but that is ultimately up to the selectmen, the residents and the state Dept. of Public

Train consultants report a mixed bag of messages

By Tom Henshaw
Mariner staff

A draft environmental impact report (EIR) has found that the proposed restoration of commuter rail service to the South Shore would create some noise, local traffic and parking problems and would displace some business firms, particularly along the Greenbush line from Braintree to Scituate.

On the other hand, said the report prepared for the MBTA and presented to the Old Colony Railroad Citizens Advisory Committee last week, it would aid traffic in general, cut air pollution and enhance the value of homes near the stations.

The MBTA is proposing to restore commuter service to Boston on three former Old Colony Railroad lines on which passenger trains were abandoned in July 1959.

All would begin at Boston's South Station and diverge at Braintree, one line running to Greenbush in Scituate, the second to Plymouth and the third to Middleboro.

Target dates to start service are 1990 for the Middleboro and Plymouth (as far as South Hanson) lines and 1993 for the Greenbush line.

The 375 page draft EIR had this to say about possible impacts on towns along the ways:

Cohasset — This part of the line runs between the Hingham and Scituate lines. A proposed station site is located just off Route 3A at the site of a boat sales showroom. The right-of-way has been abandoned since the early 1960s and the track has been removed.

The proposed station site will require the acquisition of a 2.81-acre parcel on Planning Bd. holds the aces in affordable housing plan

The Planning Board now holds the cards for the future of affordable housing in Cohasset and they are not going to play them until they are good and ready.

Selectmen and Housing Authority members signed an agreement with the Executive Office of Communities and Development last week, pledging that they would proceed in good faith toward providing more affordable housing.

Planning board members, however, voted last week not to sign the agreement because they felt that the document would put too much power in the hands of the state.

"The planning board is for low income housing that is run by the town," said board chairman Robert Sturdy. "We are not going to sign a document saying that we are guilty of all of these terrible sins and that we are going to rectify them immediately. The verbiage of the document is full of state allegations," said Sturdy.

"There just isn't any housing that falls within the category of affordable housing in Cohasset. Anything with an occupancy permit in this town is worth more than $90,000," said Sturdy.

The breaking of the agreement between the town and the state, that Cohasset will proceed in good faith towards more affordable housing, would subject Cohasset to the withholding of state funds for large projects currently in the planning.

The state would find Cohasset, "unreasonably restrictive," according to Executive Secretary Donald Andrew, if the planning board refuses to sign the agreement. Presently, according to Andrew, selectmen are proceeding as if the agreement were still in effect.

"There is absolutely nothing Cohasset can do outside of subsidized housing," said Sturdy. "We are certainly not in favor of a program that lets the developer come into town with a carte blanche and do whatever he wants. This would have a tremendous environmental impact. If you read the fine print we would be entering an affirmative market program. If you don't use local funds you can't help the local people," continued Sturdy.

"The planning board is saying lets do something for the local people of Cohasset. As it turns out Cohasset is actually sort of average. There are a substantial number of low income people in town, people who bought their houses twenty years ago but most certainly do not make $100,000 a year. This is not the high brow community with snob zoning that it has the reputation for being," added Sturdy.

The board feels that for every low income unit, too many market-rate units will follow.

The planning board was due to study this question further at their Aug. 26 meeting.

— Bob Tis

Glad to be back in Cohasset !

What a long strange trip it was. But five Cohasset travellers are back, in one piece for the most part and ready to talk about it.

It all started in a big red van that broke down before they even reached the Cohasset city limits and the trip flourished through three countries and 27 states.

Pete Carlson, Paul Sullivan, Dave Sargent, Ben Kennedy and James Replogle set out on a cross country trek in mid-July.

The trip took them through Canada down through Chicago and the greater midwest into the Dakotas. The wild west featured rodeos, an attacking moose, buffalo burgers at Custers last hamburger stand and a quick glance at Mt. Rushmore.

The Grand Tetons, a unanimous favorite spot, was next with snowball fights on top of active glaciers being the order of the day. After a three day, 30- mile, hike, the intrepid travellers hightailed it for the coast by way of Utah and sin city itself, Las Vegas.

These young representatives from Cohasset High School Class of 1982, now a little bit short on funds from the stop in Vegas, hit the surf and made the scene in La Jolla, California.

Tossed and turned into oblivion by the twenty foot waves "da boyz" headed for Mexico for cheap exchange on the almighty dollar.

"Tijuana was everthing we expected and worse," said a suntanned and full bearded Paul Sullivan. Loaded with souvenirs and trinkets for the folks back home, the long journey back east was now a reality.

A "get home " fund was established and the van dubbed "big red mutant" adorned with a moose pelvis from the Black Hills tied to the grill, rambled towards

Cohasset's week . . .

Lighthouse hauling postponed

An airlift of granite blocks from the top of Minot's Light to Government Island has been indefinitely postponed because a larger helicopter is needed to haul the one-ton blocks.

However, the airlifting may be done by the end of this week or early next week.

The blocks were scheduled to be airlifted last week but the pilot felt the available copter was too light to carry the blocks.

The blocks are being replaced as part of the renovation for the 127-year old light. David Wadsworth, senior curator of the Cohasset Historical Society, hopes some of the 70 blocks will remain at the Lighthouse Historical Park on Government Island where they were originally cut and fitted before being transported by barge to the lighthouse site off Scituate.

The society has also requested the Coast Guard for other lighthouse artifacts due to be discarded such as curved bricks from the interior, double doors and an old rotating mechanism for the light. Wadsworth said no decision has been reached on this request.

Wadsworth said much of the work on the light, aside from the stonecutting was done by Cohasset residents such as Capt. Tower who owned and operated the vessel that carried the blocks to the offshore site.

The lighthouse was dedicated on Government Island in 1858 in a ceremony which featured orator Edward Everett.

A helicopter flies over Minot's Light ready to transfer some blocks but the copter wasn't heavy enough to carry the one-ton blocks.

Transfer Station engineer

The Disposal Area Study Committee announced to selectmen Monday their selection of SEA Associates as the engineering firm for a proposed transfer station.

"The cost of a transfer station is between $300,000-800,000," said Anson Whealer of the Committee.

A transfer station burns trash, which is turned into electricity and then sells it back to power companies.

"I'm inclined to go with the firm that has done this before," said Whealer regarding the selection. "What we told them is that we want an adequate transfer station not a Taj Mahal. I believe that they will be on the low end of the money range."

Whealer also made a request to the board for a transfer of funds for preliminary sight work and a rough design. The Disposal Area Study committee, chaired by Priscila Tebbetts, will present three articles for town meeting.

Sen. Kerry to speak

Senator John F. Kerry will share his views on the Central American crisis on Monday, Aug. 31 at 7:30 p.m., Barnes Auditorium, Hingham.

Senator Kerry has represented Massachusetts in the Senate since his election in 1984. He serves on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee; the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation; and the Small Business Committee, as well as the Foreign Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism. Through his work on the subcommittee, Kerry has pursued evidence of drug smuggling areas in Central America.

John Kerry has been a proponent of peace efforts in the region, such as the Contadora process. Responding to questions concerning the Reagan peace initiative, Kerry told the Boston Globe, "It's appropriate to encourage this administration to negotiate."

Senator Kerry has been involved in the issues of Central America over the past several years. He has been asked to share with the public his findings, views, and expectations. A question-and-answer period will follow his presentation.

Kerry has been invited to speak by the South Shore Committee Against Intervention in Central America, a Hingham-based citizens' group.

The Wirths take their case to the state

By Mike Berger
Mariner staff

A Red Gate Lane couple who have vowed to fight any harassment charges filed by the town or members of the Cohasset Riding Club have taken their environmental battle to the state concerning horseback riding at Wheelwright Park.

In late July, selectemen requested town counsel's assistance resolving the eight-year long dispute between the Cohasset Riding Club and Jacqueline and Robert Wirth, abutters to Wheelwright Park.

The Wirths are upset they were not notified to attend a selectmen's meeting when Sally Davenport of the Riding Club discussed an incident involving young horse riders and Mrs. Wirth.

Mrs. Wirth had submitted a written complaint to selectmen regarding excessive dust that she says is caused by horses at the park.

Mrs. Wirth told the Mariner she has not harassed anyone but she alerted the instructors to the dust being raised July 22 in hot and humid weather after what she claimed was 5½ hours of horseback riding.

Town Counsel Richard Henderson said he has been requested to investigate if interference with horseback riders resulted in harassment. But he noted he has not been presented with specific evidence.

"I need reports of the parties involved, when it happened, and what people said," said Henderson. As of Monday afternoon, he had no evidence to begin his report.

Town counsel previously ruled the riding club could use the park which was given by the trustees to the town for use by residents. The riding club was given permission to use the park several years ago by selectmen and counsel determined the club's use of the park is an allowed use under the deed.

After years of complaints by the Wirths, the state Dept. of Public Health issued a letter in September of 1986 which told town officials there were specific problems with horse manure and rats at Wheelright Park.

Howard Wensley of the Division of Community Sanitation of the state Public Health office said this was unacceptable and must be abated.

Another letter written by Jeffrey Lane, a state sanitation supervisor, a week later said the Board of Health agreed that town workers would water the park ring daily or more if needed.

Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik responded to a complaint made by Mrs. Wirth about the dust caused by the riding rink at the park July 23.

In his report, he noted, at that time, Mrs. Sally Davenport was giving instructions to two riders. One horse was cantering and another was working. Dust was generated into the air but was no longer visible.

Dr. Godzik noted he saw a truck drive past the riding rink, going into the park. This, he said, generated more dust than the horse. He concluded this dust did not constitute a nuisance or a danger to public health.

Unhappy with this report, Mrs. Wirth complained to the state Dept. of Environmental Quality Engineering. Bill Vickers of the Division of Air Quality Control told Mrs. Wirth Aug. 21, upon his return from vacation, he would ask town officials for a definite watering plan for the rink.

Mrs. Wirth also told the Mariner she has circulated a petition to return Wheelwright Park to its natural state.

The petition requests that the park entrance field be returned to its natural state and enable children and families to use the entrance field for passive recreation and to "enjoy the use of the park in a safe and healthy environment."

She is concerned with the safety of the Cub Scouts who may want to use the entrance to the park on any given day .

Mrs. Wirth said it is not her intent to rid the park of horseback riders but she feels the entrance is not the right place for the riders. "It's the right activity but not in the right place."

Cohasset to celebrate Constitution Day

By David Wadsworth
Special to the Mariner

Thursday, Sept. 17 will be celebrated nationwide as Constitution Day, the official day marking the 200th anniversary of the signing of the United States Constitution at the Philadelphia Constitutional Convention of 1787.

Although Sept. 17 will not be a national holiday, observances honoring our Constitution's Bicentennial will be held in committees throughout the nation. All citizens are urged to participate in this important national event.

Cohasset's Constitutional Bicentennial Committee announces the following Constitution Day events which will be held as part of the Town's official observance of Constitution Day, Thursday, Sept. 17.

8:30 a.m. — Flag raising ceremony at the Town Flag Pole on the Common. A large American flag which once flew above the nation's Capitol will be presented to the Town by the Col. Thomas Lothrop Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

A short ceremony accompanying the presentation will be held at the Common where the Town's Constitutional Bicentennial flag already flies, honoring Cohasset's official participation in the national observance.

Noon — Dedication of Constitution Park. The Town's newly designated part at the junction of Ripley Road and Depot Court will be officially dedicated.

A commemorative marker of stone and a plaque bearing an appropriate inscription will be installed at the newly named park, and its official opening will be the occasion for a Constitution Day ceremony. Landscaping for the parksite is being provided by the Amateur Garden Club of Cohasset and the Community Garden Club of Cohasset.

4 p.m. — The town's churches have been invited to participate in the national bell-ringing ceremony by the ringing of church bells. Churches across the nation are invited to participate.

7:30 p.m. — A free band concert honoring the Constitution's Bicentennial Day will be presented at Cohasset Common.

The town's Recreation Commission and the Bicentennial Committee are co-sponsoring a special evening band concert on the Common with music appropriate for the occasion. (In case of cold or inclement weather, the concert will be held at the High School Auditorium, by special arrangement with the Cohasset Schools.)

Cohasset citizens of all ages are invited to attend the town's Constitution Day observances.

In addition, homeowners and businesses of Cohasset

New King Street plan detailed. . .

Works," explained Sturdy.

The planning boards role has been to extract funds for the building of the new light. Donald Staszco, project developer for the Stop and Shop complex, will be paying for the installation of the light.

A steering committee of King Street residents met with Staszco at Nancy Garrison's King Street residence Tuesday night.

According to Debbie Cook of the King Street Committee, new plans for the light were favored by residents.

"Staszco has agreed to the go back in front of the selectmen and ask for the permit to be amended to allow a regular square at the intersection," said Cook.

This square would allow traffic to enter King Street from 3A, only if there was a green light.

The King Street residents still plan to address the issue at a special October town meeting. The warrant article will ask the town to make King Street into a one way street.

King Street residents considering a new alternative; making King Street unaccessible from 3A.

"We will have something on the warrant," said Cook, " we have more than enough signatures."

"If we do succeed at town meeting," continued Cook,"in making the street one way Staszco has agreed to fund the entire project including the landscaping costs. The Stop and Shop is a big project and and he wants it to look nice," added Cook.

The King street residents are very hopeful for a positive outcome on their warrant article at town meeting.

"I don't think that either alternative would infringe upon anyone's rights," said Cook. "I don't think there would be any hardship; it definitely shouldn't be a short cut for speeding cars."

Supt. Easton may be reconsidered

A vote to pass over a new contract for Clifford Easton, superintendent of South Shore Vocational Technical High School may be reconsidered, following a request from the chairman of the regional school board.

School committee members were asked last week to list five major concerns about Easton's performance.

Vice chairman Lloyd Patriquin, standing in for chairman Robert Molla, told committee members that Molla had requested the list for a future meeting with Easton.

"I think every opportunity should be given to Easton to clear up any misunderstandings," Patriquin, of Whitman, said later.

The committe voted 4 to 3 in June to not renew Easton's contract when it expires in 1988. Members Patriquin, Dennis Blackwell of Hanover, and David Chittim of Cohasset voted to retain Easton, while Molla, Walter Easttey of Abington, John Doyle of Rockland, and James McDermott of Hanson, voted against retiring him.

Although Easton received high marks on his annual evaluation, many members cited his lack of communication with the committee and low staff morale as the reason for not renewing the contract. Some members also feel he has been too controversial in his six years at the school.

The board voted during the July meeting not to reconsider its decision to let Easton's contract expire.

But Patriquin said he felt the committee should have met with Easton before the board discussed the evaluations to air their concerns. But Molla said in an interview Sunday, that the committee does not usually meet with superintendents prior to evaluation discussions.

Molla said he requested the list to determine committee members' concerns about the whole school and not just Easton's performance.

"I just want to see the concerns of the committee members," Molla said. "It's just a way of keeping up with things and deciding what we're going to do. We'll have to wait and see whether he (Easton) survives the issue or we go with someone else."

He said he was uncertain what the concerns will be or if he will initiate any action to rehire Easton. Molla said he hopes to have the list of concerns by the end of this week to consider before making any decisions regarding Easton.

Molla said a subcommittee will meet with Easton to review the comments of committee members.

But board members Easttey and Doyle said they felt the issue should be dropped.

"I don't think it should be dragged on like this," Doyle said last week. "There isn't going to be a chance for reconsideration."

Doyle said he felt some members were simply looking for a way to get the board to reconsider its decision since the board had defeated an earlier motion for reconsideration.

"They want another shot. They're looking for a loophole to suggest that it be reconsidered," he said.

PARKIS ON PAID LEAVE

In other business last week, the school committee voted to place social studies teacher Robert Parkis on a paid leave of absence from Sept. 8 until Oct. 14, when the board will decide whether to fire him from the South Shore Vocational Technical High School.

Parkis was suspended from the school for two days last January. School administrators charged him with not leaving adequate instructions for the substitute teachers when he took a lengthy emergency leave of absence last November to care for his wife who had cancer.

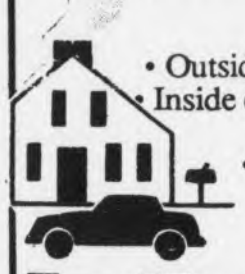
Superintendent Easton has also accused Parkis of taking grade evaluation forms from the registration office without permission and for using an unfair grading system in his classes.

Easton sent Parkis a letter dated Aug. 10 notifying him of his possible dismissal. In the letter Easton wrote, "your dismissal is proposed because of your alleged incapacity, and/or insubordination, and/or inefficiency, and/or other good causes, those items to be discussed."

The board had voted against Parkis' grievance on the two-day suspension earlier this year.

Although chairman Molla refused to state the exact reasons for dismissal until the scheduled hearing, he did say the board has strong concerns about Parkis' performance at the school. Molla said the leave of absence prior to the hearing was standard procedure in cases where a teacher's conduct is being evaluated.

"We're just saying we don't want him in the classroom pending the outcome of the hearing," he said.



The committee will meet with Parkis at the Oct. 14 meeting and is expected to make a decision then on whether to fire him. Since Parkis has tenure he has a right to a hearing before the board, Molla said.

"It's all up to us now," he said.

George Strait will appear at South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset Wednesday, September 2, at 8 p.m.

His vocal phrasing has won him critical acclaim across the country as well as such top-selling hits as "Does Fort Wayne Ever Cross Your Mind," "You Look So Good In Love" and "Amarillo By Morning."

Strait's special guest for his Music Circus appearances will be Cathy Mattea.

Tickets for George Strait's concert are available at the Music Circus box office or by calling 383-1400. Music Circus tickets are also available at all Ticketron locations, Boston ticket agencies and the BOSTIX Booth in Faneuil Hall.

No intimidation here

The Planning Board is not about to be intimidated by the state Environmental Office of Community Development, selectmen, or the developers of the new Stop & Shop. They hold the key to quite a few of the towns' problems.

The control that the planning board has is immense. Presently the board has in its hands every major decision in Cohasset.

They are very much in favor of low-income housing but they are not going to compromise their position on local control.

The planning board has approved the Stop and Shop permits but were conscientious enough to look out for the neighbors on King Street and Fair Oaks Lane.

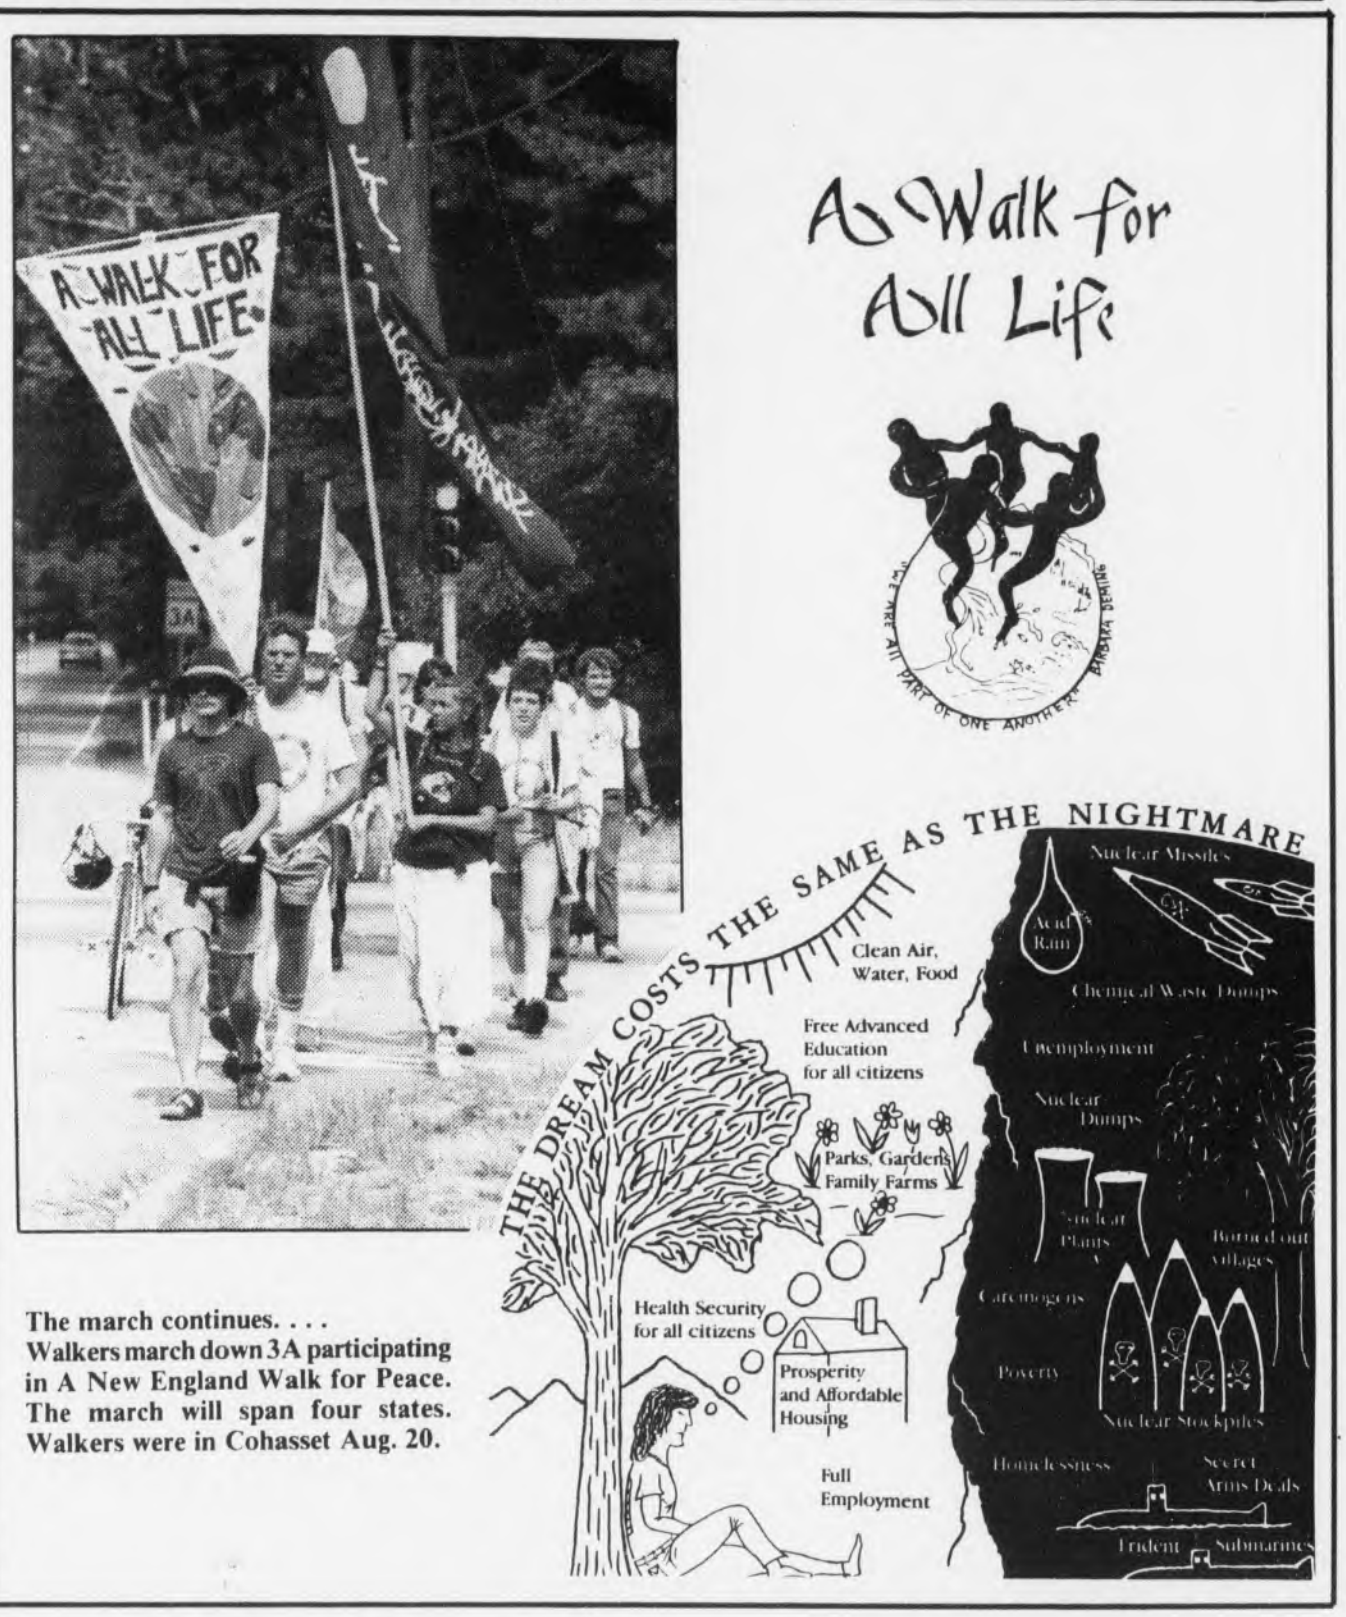
One might wonder what the situation was a few years back when the yellow monster of a sign for Ko Ko Island was approved.

When the yellow neon sign, welcoming people to Cohasset, was approved it was a different board making a different brand of decision.

The compensation board members receive for their toil is being able to drive around our seaside community relieved that it has kept a great deal of its natural beauty and architectural integrity.

The well-thought-out decisions and the tireless effort the planning board members make should be an inspiration to all town officials.

The planning board has the heart of Cohasset in mind with every decision. They are not corrupted by the financial persuasions that could influence other boards.



As much as selectmen would like to deny it, clearly their mind must be on the town's pocketbook when issues such as affordable housing and the possibility of state withheld funds come into play.

Town boards are inevitably swayed by the benefits of the new Stop and Shop.

The planning board is simply not worried about Cohasset's tax base. It is not their job.

The planning board does not profit from local development. The board has only Cohasset's best interests in mind.

They deserve the continued support of the community in return for their continued support of us.

The march continues. . . . Walkers march down 3A participating in A New England Walk for Peace. The march will span four states. Walkers were in Cohasset Aug. 20.

QUALITY AUDITING CAC MARK OF INTEGRITY

Murray's Memoes

State Auditor tax reform isn't enough

By State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray
Special to the Mariner

The decision, early last week, by State Auditor A. Joseph DeNucci on the amount of a tax refund available under the new Massachusetts tax cap law was disappointing.

The auditor's calculation put the rebate at just over $29 million. That's about $44 million lower than the estimate that was made by the Massachusetts Revenue Department last July.

The auditor's decision to include money raised by the state's income tax surtax is the reason for the lower refund amount. By including the surtax money in the state's tax base, the tax limit was raised. The increased limit cut into the amount available for a refund, chopping it by $44 million.

When the Legislature repealed the surtax last year, the intention was to leave that money out of the tax base and to return it to taxpayers. That was also the intention of the groups that support the repeal of the surtax and of all the people who voted for the repeal.

To ignore all that is unfair. To ignore all that shortchanges all the taxpayers of the Commonwealth.

When the voters passed the tax cap law back in 1986, it was aimed at holding down tax revenue increases. Under the law, the state can only raise taxes according to the percentage increase in the average state wage.

By fooling around with the numbers, the state auditor has manipulated the limit and has cut $44 million out of the rebate.

The Massachusetts High Technology Council has announced it plans to file a lawsuit challenging the auditor's interpretation of the law on the tax cap.

As one of the original sponsors of the cap, the council has a good idea of what the law was intended to do.

Its chief goal was to return to you, the taxpayer, the biggest refund possible. The lawsuit, therefore, is a good choice, the auditor's decision was not.

CURE asks for nuclear legal injunction

Letters

To the Editor:

In the interest of preserving public health and safety, CURE urges Massachusetts residents to contact Governor Dukakis immediately asking him to seek a legal injunction to prevent the restart of the Pilgrim Nuclear Power Plant until a workable evacuation plan is in the hands of all communities within the 10-mile emergency planning zone.

Further, we feel it is imperative that legal action be taken to prevent the refueling of this problem-plagued plant. The current refueling process will involve replacing 580 15-foot fuel bundles to the core of the reactor. Two-thirds of these assemblies are radioactive and are currently stored on site in the spent fuel pool adjacent to the reactor. They must be transported back by means of a crane.

CURE has not seen evidence of important design changes to be made to the Standby Gas Treatment System which is required to mitigate the conseqences of a fuel handling accident. An accident during the refueling procedure could require the initiation of the emergency response plan. We do not have one.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has yet to approve or endorse Boston Edison's containment enhancements. Finally, serious questions remain unanswered by the Massachusetts Department of Public Health regarding the alarming increase of cancer in the towns downwind of Pilgrim.

Please join us in this effort by contacting the Governor and your elected officials.

Cross Country journey, a big success. . .

Boulder in search of local Cohasset hero, Steve "Tidal Wave" Smalzel.

Coming up empty on a three day local tavern search in the Greater Denver area for the elusive Smalzel, the red van continued home rich with tales of the open highway.

With one last stop in Ohio for some refueling and a cool dip, the young travelers returned 90 days later a bit older and rich with fond memories of the American West.

What did they learn?

"Never to travel with five guys in van for a whole summer," joked Pete Carlson. "We saw the country; did everything that we wanted and ran out of money; it was very worthwhile," added Carlson.

Whats next? Carlson, Kennedy and Sullivan will soon be hitting the books for their final semesters of college. Carlson and Kennedy will be both matriculating at Northeastern University and Sullivan will be finishing at UMass-Boston. Sargent will soon be working as a marine engineer. Replogle will be seeking a career in sales.

Intrepid travellers Dave Sargent, Jamie Replogle, Ben Kennedy, Pete Carlson and Paul Sullivan poised on top of their vehicle in the shadow of the Grand Tetons.

A day in the life of the Cohasset travelers

(The following is a day in the life of the "Magnificant" five travelers from Cohasset, specifically the words of Benjamin Kennedy.)

Rolling down Route 25 out of Boulder, Colorado, refrigerator packed with fresh fruit, magazines sprawled half-read on the floor, and plenty of Vivarian tablets near the driver's seat, the big red van is on its way home at last.

Many of you may have read the July article kicking off our cross-country tour but this news comes straight from the heart of the roaming van that led five guys into American lands far-away from New England — desert campgrounds, canyon trails, and mountain ridges.

The trip has been full of surprises from coast to coast. From Boston to San Diego and back, we never had enough time to fill our journals. . .

What we have found is a sharper image of what we believed America was all about. Miles of highways that led us into bustling cities like Chicago and Salt Lake City.

Forests and national parks filled with elk, moose, bear, bison and many other species of wildlife (all easily identified, of course, by our handy North American Wildlife Handbook.)

Towering mountains that beckoned us to their peaks and ridges, thousands of feet above sea level — sometimes in driving rain storms. Lakes, ponds, rivers and streams inviting us to plunge in and clear our heads, tired from driving.

Special moments like lying on a picnic table late at night, facing the zillions of stars and being the first to spot a passing satellite; wrestling the crashing ten foot waves on a San Diego beach, or racing madly from a charging bull moose and still managing to save the expensive camera equipment.

But how has it all gone so fast? We left Cohasset July 18, after a hearty pancake breakfast, the van's blow-horn tooting farewell. Now it's Aug. 16 and with no money in our pockets and the seal broken on our "emergency-get-home-fast" fund, we faced a 36 no-stop drive to a campground in the Pennsylvania hills where we'll rest up before continuing on to Cohasset.

The trip has been full of surprises from coast to coast. From Boston to San Diego and back, we never had enough time to fill our journals with all the details of our adventures. I remember one encounter that shook us all at a campground outside of San Diego.

Southern California's sunny coast welcomed us with warm sunshine, promising plenty of excitement but it appeared as if everyone else had been welcomed too, crowding all the campgrounds for miles around.

Our only choice was a 30 mile cruise to the Viejas Indian Reservation in Alpine.

An old wooden sign posted outside the entrance read "All campers are subject to the laws and regulations enforced by the Indian Council herein."

Little did we realize that the laws gave their herd of roaming cattle the right of way anywhere.

In our tents around 3 a.m., we were suddenly awakened — adrenalin pumping — by the noisy approach of a visiting herd. Lying in breath-held silence we listened as the curious hoof-clomping, tail-swishing, cud chewing cows wandered through our campsite. We hoped none would stumble upon our flimsy tents. Luck was on our side, for they left and the next morning we found only several foot-deep, foot-wide "calling cards" next to our picnic table. I was warning Peter about such a possibility when he pointed down at my feet and laughed. Time for the camp showers.

Perhaps the most strenuous part of the trip was traversing an 11,000 foot ridge in the wild Teton Mountains of Wyoming. Surprised by the harsh climate of the Western Rockies in mid-summer, we were caught in a driving rain and near-freezing temperatures which chilled us to the bone and soaked our gear. The 20-mile hike up the narrow rocky trail to Paintbrush Divide left us with heavy feet and wobbly legs. We had left behind a beautiful valley full of moose families, colorful wildflowers, and glacier-fed lakes and streams. A snowball fight atop a glacier revived us and we snapped a few pictures to remember the experience.

However, we were unaware that another glacier had slid down off a peak onto our trail — unmarked on our topographical map.

After hurrying across the top, cursing ourselves for wearing only shorts, we slipped and slid down the steep trail and ran smack into the path of the glacier, about 100 yards across.

In our hiking boots with crepe soles, we slid along in the meager footholes of the few hikers who had gone this way. Looking down was out of the question for there was only a 45 degree angle and sharp rocks awaiting careless hikers. We all breathed again after reaching the other side and continued descending in our wet boots to the designated campground near Holly Lake.

The pine grove laced with many little brooks was beautiful as the ranger had predicted, but we were too exhausted and soaked by rain to aprpeciate it. Doffing our wet packs and gear, we prepared to set up camp. And then, over cups of hot chocolate, we found warmth and renewed strength.

Far from home, but together with friends, we lifted our spirits with conversation and, as the rain let up, we sat out on a rock ledge overlooking the wide valley and admired the beauty of America.

Traveling across America has at times seemed like visiting a foreign country, except that the language and laws are the same. When I studied and worked in Europe, I spent many days just absorbing the foreign culture and the people.

Now, after spending these weeks enjoying my own country, I realize that incredible vacations do not have to be trips to foreign lands and different cultures.

The most interesting vacation for me is being a tourist in my own country, exploring its geological wonders, talking with other Americans. I'm convinced that America is the most attractive country to discover.

AFS students report from Europe

The following are letters from Cohasset students who are enrolled in the AFS programs abroad.

(From Felecia Bartow in W. Germany — July 11)

Hi! I have so much to tell you — it's almost impossible, but I'll try. The weather has been good except for a couple of days, one of which it hailed and I had to stand under an awning for 1½ hours. We have been riding once and my legs are killing me. 1. because I hadn't been on a horse in so long, and 2. Mrs. B. was right — they walk so much my feet are going to fall off! I swear I never want to see another strawberry again... I have eaten so many it's not even funny!

Every Saturday the family goes into Ulm shopping and this Sat. I saw a church there that has the tallest spire in the world (161 meters!). While we were there, there was a wedding going on and it was the same as in Scotland, we could look on.

Every day Sabine and I go to the lake near her house and it's so much fun because all of the kids our age meet there. One day we met Anja (Sabine's best friend), Thomas, and Tino at the lake. They asked us if we wanted to go dancing that night and I was excited because I thought we were going to a disco.

Much to my surprise they meant formal dancing and I spent the afternoon learning the foxtrot, waltz, Vienna waltz, samba, and cha-cha-cha. It was so annoying because everyone thought it was such a riot that I couldn't dance — I never sat down the entire evening!

Unfortunately, Sabine and I will not be able to go to music camp; we applied too late. We now have plans to go to Munich for a couple of days. In the southern part of Germany, especially where I am, there is an unusual wind called the Fürn which is hot and can give foreigners a real problem. Some days I get a really bad headache and earache, but don't worry, I'm fine!!!

Now I will tell you about Berlin! We left on July 6 at 8 a.m. and did not arrive until 7:30 p.m. It was a little scarey going over the border because an army officer came on the bus and checked each one of our passports — especially mine! Things changed all of a sudden as soon as we got into East Germany. The roads were terribly bumpy and all you could see for miles were fields and fields. It was so funny because we drove by this little river in the middle of nowhere and all these fat old men and women were bathing nude!

We made a couple of stops to rest and eat and there were so many American military men!

Finally we arrived in West Berlin, and found out that our hotel was right on the Ku'dam, the main street with all the stores in Berlin. The rooms were beautiful and I

Board to make changes in Wompatuck State Park

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

State officials have designated several environmental protection zones inside Wompatuck State Park to maintain and protect a forest of 300 flowering dogwood trees, a white pine area, a cedar swamp as well as the second oldest colonial stone wall in the country.

"We want to funnel people in the direction that they should go," said Jack Lash, a planner with the state Department of Environmental Management. DEM is a state agency that oversees the park.

Lash said, "We want to keep people off lands with erosion potential and wetlands."

The high priority status given to these areas in the park will prevent them from being interrupted by new trails and prevent any logging for personal or commercial use.

John Richardson, described by park board members as the leading proponent of increasing protection for the park, was unable to attend Thursday's meeting but most of the rezoning was done as a result of his investigation of the 3,480-acre park.

"It is amazing to see two or three of these dogwoods in a group," said Lash of the small forest.

The now protected two-acre white cedar swamp was once responsible for suppling local shipbuilders with wood for masts.

Park officials have yet to decide whether or not they will advertise the exact location of the historic Old Colony Line, an historic stone wall that at one time divided the Puritan Massachusetts Bay Colony from the Pilgrim Plymouth Colony.

The board is also considering future state park funding projects. A traffic study will be taking place,"to get a better idea of what is going in and out of the park," said Andy Bachman of the board.

Consultants are going to pay a lot of attention to the main action roads," said Lash. "In a spring water survey it was made clear that Norwell residents didn't like driving the extra six miles to get water when one back up gate could be opened much closer to Norwell."

The possibility of installing a traffic light at the corner of Main Street and Free Street in Hingham near the entrance to the park was discussed.

"The scope of the work is to let everyone know in a public workshop," said Jane Wideman a traffic representative from the state.

"We are very concerned with maintaining contact with police and the public," said Lash.

The board is awaiting a letter from the state Dept. of Environmental Quality Engineering describing plans for the future of a 600-acre section of the park that was used as a surplus area for military equipment during World War II.

"The letter is key," said Lash,"because it says what we have to do next."

The fenced off military area has been tested negatively for signs of hazardous waste.

The board discussed increasing recreation opportunities inside the park and rehabilitation and renovation of present park services with state money.

"If the campground finally does get a swimming hole we know where we can put it [another park zone].

"We have had a lot of support for the the pool," said Lash, but he indicated that a lot of other items would"move much quicker."

The board agreed that an open play space would be important and tenetively agreed to clear two large fields.

Reports have shown that camping attendance has been way above normal. Park personnel are in the process of opening parts of the park that have never been open before.

"A timber formed playground structure is also a possibility," said Lash.

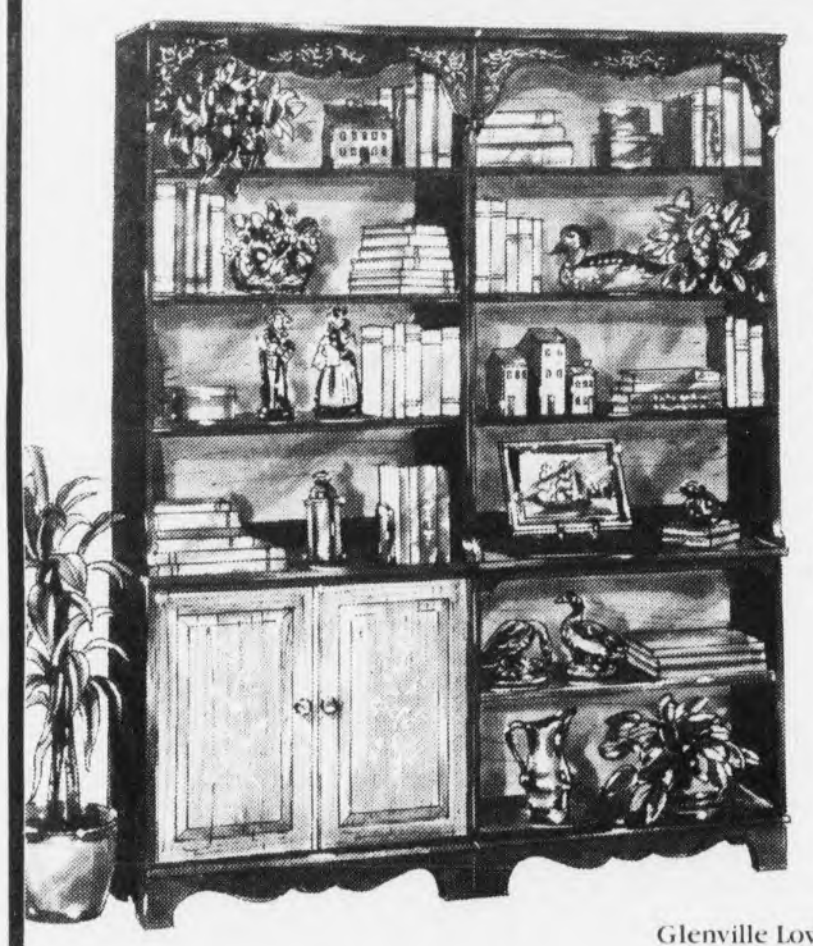
Spring water dispute

The most controversial item on the agenda of the board was the discussion of dispensing of spring water from a spigot located in the park.

"The spring is the most serious attraction we have right now," said Jack Lash.

Other board members referred to it as a nuisance.

Among the many suggestions by members was the implementation of faucet fixtures to build up the pressure in the spring overnight.



Other suggestions for the popular spring included having an attendant on duty as well as the possibility of charging a nominal fee for the water.

In a recent survey of well water drinkers, Lash explained,"51 percent said go ahead and charge a fee as long as there is an attendant on duty."

An attendant would help expedite the filling of water jugs, enforce the 10 gallon limit and help police the area for ice and litter.

The board is presently looking into the legal question of liability with people slipping on the ice which is created naturally by the spring.

"We are looking into a new surface for the steps," said Lash.

Because of the spring pressure the spigot must remain very low to the ground. "It is going to leak and we can't use chemicals," said a state official. "It would be a big deal to get an attendant considering our staffing position. It sounds nice but who wants to fill buckets all day. It would be better to work at McDonalds."

"It is a social experience to some extent," said Lash, accounting for the popularity of the spring.

The board also mentioned the possibility of the reinstitution of the very popular "cut-a-cord" of wood, program.

A letter from Miss Bartow. . .

really liked my roommates Andrea and Silke. That night we decided to walk down the Ku'dam because the cafes and discos are open all night and all of the people go walking every evening. A man came up to us and handed us free tickets to go to a disco. We decided to go and it was really nice.

I was kind of embarrassed because they started to do their formal dancing and everybody was staring. I got up and danced normally and they started to get the idea. The next day we went to the remainder of a church that was bombed in WWII and to a castle called Schloss Chareottenburg where there was an art gallery and beautiful sculpted gardens. Next, we went to a world-famous department store called Ka-de-way where there was a floor of foods from around the world (1,500 kinds of cheeses for example). That night we went to the Philharmonic with some friends and to an underground disco afterwards.

The next day we went into the DDR (E. Berlin) and we were given rules and regulations for about an hour, but it wasn't as bad as I thought it would be. I split up from the group to go through the checkpoint for foreigners and it was so crowded with people trying to get through that it took three hours. A soldier was counting people off and he wanted me to stop and I didn't hear him and he shoved me instead of asking me again! I was really scared because they all look like they do in the movies with high boots, hats, and uniforms. The man at the checkpoint looks at you and then your passport about a million times. Next you give him $30 DM (5 for a visa and 25 you must spend). E. Berlin is very different from West Berlin.

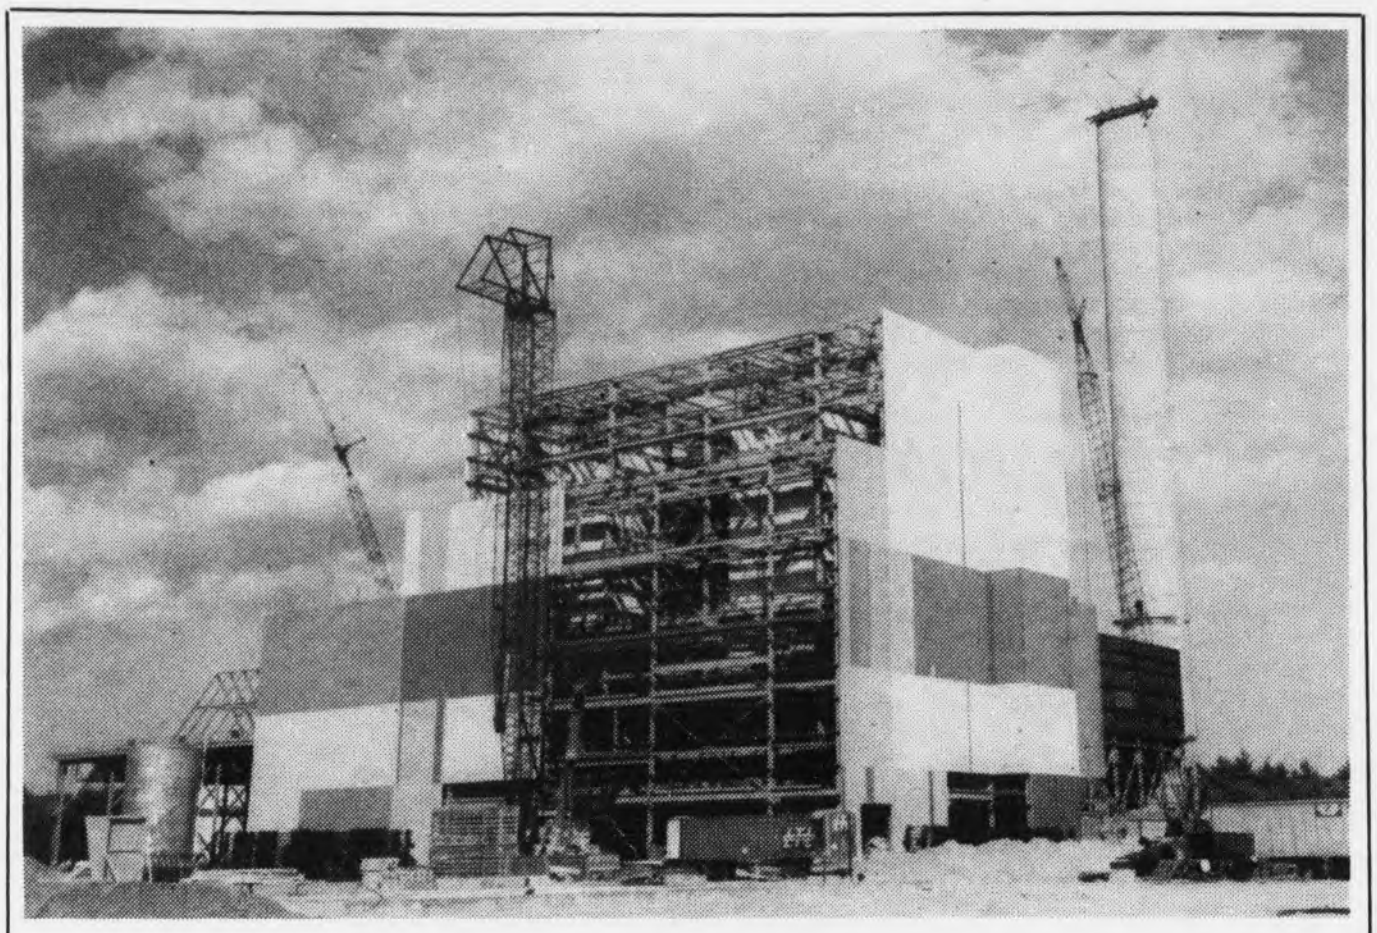
Rochester SEMASS plant under construction

By Elaine Allegrini
Mariner staff

Some said it would never be built, but the frame of the $208 million SEMASS resource recovery plant rises high in the sky along a rural road in Rochester.

"We're eight months ahead of schedule," general manager Gordon Sutin said during a recent interview in his trailer-office at the construction site.



Up to 300 workers a day report to the project which is expected to be completed in time for an October,1988 start-up.

Thirty-two communities in Southeastern Massachusetts have signed contracts with SEMASS. From Braintree to Cape Cod, 1,800 tons of trash a day will be hauled over roads and rail lines and dumped into the huge receiving area, sorted, shredded and burned to produce electricity which will in turn be sold to Commonwealth Electric.

Communities which signed with SEMASS early will be rewarded with a $12 per ton tipping fee, the amount for each ton of rubbish left for burning. Cape Cod towns have signed for $14.99 a ton. Plus, all communities will have to pay a surcharge for acid gas removal systems. Right now, that cost is estimated to be $5.20 a ton. That surcharge will be adjusted after a year, Sutin said.

The costs do not include transportation from the towns to the site. Transportation costs will vary according to the location from which the trash is hauled. Communities must pay those transportation costs in addition to the tipping fee.

Carver will not have to pay a tipping fee because SEMASS has contracted to use the Carver-Marion Wareham landfill which is located in the southern end of Carver.

The $208 million SEMASS resource recovery plant in Rochester.

Gordon Sutin

He has been involved with SEMASS since the idea was first proposed early in this decade. At that time, he was a consultant.

He moved here last year from his Canadian home to manage the project. It was Sutin who designed the first shred and burn resource recovery plant in Ontario, Canada, in 1972.

With his experience in the field, he gets upset at those who liken SEMASS to "mass burn" facilities. "This is not a mass burn incinerator," Sutin said emphatically. "It's a shred and burn facility. It can't be compared at all to mass burn."

The trash, he said, is shredded and then blown inside the furnace where it burns in mid air. "We took the traditional ways of burning things and adapted them to garbage," he explained. "It's not a new idea, it's just a new approach."

The capital costs of the shred and burn facility are some 30 percent less than a comparable mass burn facility, according to Sutin. And, because cleaner ash is produced, operating costs will be lower and more electricity generated.

The Rochester plant will be the first in the nation to have acid gas controls. To learn more about this new aspect, Sutin will soon travel to Zurich, Switzerland, to see first hand a resource recovery plant with acid gas scrubbers. He plans to meet with engineers there and discuss the operation.

Generating electricity

"We'll be generating enough electricty here for50,000 houses," Sutin said, pointing to the huge generator which is being installed in the building. "Eight percent of the electricity ComElectric uses will come from here."

Towns which have already signed with SEMASS will not see any increase in tipping fees for the life of their current contracts. And, by late in the century, Sutin said the tipping fee will equal the income from energy which will be passed on to the communities.

From the 110-foot high building where the trash is burned to heat the water, producing steam to generate electricity, the power will be carried across Route 28 to where ComElectric will have a switching station.

Transporting the trash

From a Braintree transfer station which SEMASS controls, trash will be hauled over the Middleboro to Cape Cod rail line to the resource recovery plant. The rail line runs alongside the 100-acre parcel controlled by SEMASS.

A rail spur will allow the trains to pull right up to the building where the car will tip the trash on the floor of the recieving area.

Currently, SEMASS only has one transfer station, in Braintree. There are no plans to construct additional company-owned stations, but three upper Cape Cod communities are expected to locate a transfer station near Otis Air Force Base.

Estimates call for 50 trucks a day to pull into the site which sits back from the road and is accessible by a long driveway which will eliminate any back up of traffic along Route 28. Trucks will deliver trash by day; trains will deliver trash by night, according to Sutin.

Cape Cod communities, all the way down to Provincetown, have contracted with SEMASS. That trash may be hauled by train, too, Sutin said.

Sorting the trash

Trash will be dumped on the huge floor of the receiving area and loaded onto conveyors where magnets will pull out the metal. Along the route to the furnace, larger items will be separated, cut into smaller sections and returned for routine shredding.

"Household waste" is the general phrase applied to that which will be accepted by SEMASS. And, Sutin said, "There is a long list of prohibted items" included in the contracts with communities.

White items, the term which includes kitchen stoves, washing machines and other appliances, are prohibited. So are large quantities of tires.

But, Sutin said, a tire which is included in household waste will not be rejected. Large quantities of tires will be rejected.

Commercial rubbish, composed primarily of cardboard boxes, will also be accepted.

According to Sutin, SEMASS will take prohibited items and then dispose of them by calling a private contractor. However, towns would be better off collecting the bulky items and calling a contractor in to dipose of them, he said. That would save the transportation costs from the towns to the SEMASS site.

Ash byproducts

SEMASS wants to recycle the ash which is left after burning. Studies are currently underway to determine what will be done with fly ash, the tiny talcum-powder particles which are in the smoke.

"We've concluded we can bind the product together. I think that's going to be the answer," Sutin said. The study is being conducted by SEMASS in conjuction with Syracuse University and Rensselaer Polytechnical Institute.

Of the 350-400 tons of ash which will be produced daily at the plant, 25 percent (100 tons a day) of that will fly ash. The acid gas scrubbers are being installed to minimize the fly ash. Lime is also used in the process to neutralize the acids, according to Sutin.

SEMASS plans an ash processing plant at the site. There, ash will be separated into components - brass, bronze, aluminum, copper, etc. That, Sutin said, will come out in a single mixture which will be sold for recycling. He showed a concrete block with small specs of colored glass throughout. The block, he said, was made with ash.

Train route's impact to Cohasset explained. . .

which the boat sales showroom is located. The number of employees to be displaced has yet to be determined. Relocation expenses and assistance will be provided.

Right-of-way from the Hingham line to the station site is owned by the U. S. government and the remainder is owned by the town of Cohasset.

The impact corridor for this section for ground-borne vibration will be 130 feet on each side of the track. About 36 houses are inside the corridor and 34 are significantly inside it. Reduction in vibration levels will be accomplished by increased depth of ballast and use of a resilient rail fastening system.

The station parking lot will abut a section of Great Swamp and pollutants from the lot could have a negative impact on water quality and downstream wetlands. The lot will be designed with an internal drainage system and catch basins to separate pollutants from runoff water.

Paving the station site will slightly increase the rate of rainwater runoff so the need for a flood retention pond will be reviewed with the Cohasset Conservation Commission.

"The proposed station entrance on Route 3A represents the principal focus of traffic concern because speeds here are fairly high. The North Main Street/Forest Avenue intersection, the King Street grade crossing just south of North Main, the King Street/Route 3A intersection are also key locations of concern.

"It is assumed that this would be a local station, serving a large proportion of drop-off patronage. Total daily vehicle arrivals . . . are estimated at 175 of which about 87 would be expected to arrive during the peak hour. All patrons trips are assumed to originate in Cohasset.

"Queuing at the station entrance may cause difficulties for through traffic on Route 3A. Possible mitigating measures involve provision for left-turn storage on Route 3A eastbound for entering volumes, plus adequate signage and pedestrian connections, A pedestrian-activated signal may be justified as a safety measure."

The Bound Brook archaeological site in the Sohier Street area was disturbed during the original construction of the railroad but, to avoid inadvertent further damage, plans will be reviewed with the Massachusetts Historical Commission and the State Archaeological Officer.

North Scituate — This portion of the line runs from the Cohasset line to Beaver Dam Road. It includes a proposed North Scituate station located just east of the intersection of Gannett Street and the right-of-way.

The town owns the right-of-way but the station location will require acquisition of vacant portions of several parcels of privately owned land and the partial taking of a fuel storage yard.

The impact corridor for ground-borne vibration will be 130 feet on each side of the tracks. About 41 houses are inside the corridor, 37 of them significantly inside. Vibration levels will be reduced by a combination of increased ballast depth and the use of a resilient rail fastening system.

Parking lot pollutants could have a negative impact on The Gulf water quality and the estuarine wetlands. To minimize this impact a 100-foot wide buffer of vegetation will be maintained between the parking lot and the marshes.

Construction of the station will decrease the site's rainwater retention capacity and increase runoff rates so the need for a retention pond or ponds will be reviewed with the Scituate Conservation Commission.

"A station at this location is anticipated to attract approximately 320 daily vehicle arrivals. The principal access route will be the Scituate arterial streets, including: Gannett Road, South Main Street, Country Way, Booth Hill Road and H. T. Bailey Road, and Route 3A to a lesser extent.

"Mitigating measures will include grade crossing controls at North Scituate Village and minor improvements on Gannett Street close to the station entrance such as the removal of selected on-street parking spaces, pavement markings, signage.

"It will also be necessary to substantially redesign the North Scituate Village to reduce the pavement widths the gates must cover and to better control traffic movement."

Greenbush — This segment runs from Beaver Dam Road to Greenbush. It includes a Greenbush station located between the right-of-way, the Old Driftway and the New Driftway.

The location of the commuter rail terminal or for an express bus/park-ride facility in Greenbush will require acquisition of several parcels of land. Buildings on the site include the Driftway Tennis Club, the Plymouth & Brockton bus garage and the Smith Auto Body Shop. Also a school bus storage yard.

"The number of workers that will be displaced by the takings has not yet been determined. Relocation expenses and relocation assistance will be provided to these businesses."

The town of Scituate owns the right-of-way. The impact corridor for ground-borne vibration will be 130 feet on each side of the track and about 21 houses are inside the corridor, 12 of them significantly. Reduction in vibration levels will be achieved by increasing the ballast depth and installing a resilient rail fastening system.

"The proposed Greenbush line equipment layover facility will be located on and to the east of the right-of-way south of the Driftway. The layover site southern limit will be adjacent to the North River marshes and will be separated from First Herring Brook to the west by a shopping center."

The New Driftway, which currently carries a light volume of traffic, provides access from Route 3A to the station. Stockbridge Road, Country Way and the Old Driftway are also involved.

"Vehicular demand at this station would probably approximate 900 vehicles per day or 450 at peak hour. More than half the traffic would have Marshfield origins and be oriented towards Route 3A as would Duxbury traffic. Norwell traffic (less than 10%) would arrive via Route 123.

"Mitigating measures required include: further improvements to the Route 3A/New Driftway/CountryWay/Route 123 intersection to minimize conflicting movements in the rotary; replacement of the existing Old Driftway rialroad bridge; and minor widening and left-turn storage at the New Driftway/Old Driftway intersection."

Camera Club meeting

The Duxbury Camera Club, now a member of the New England Camera Club Council, will hold its first meeting for 1987-88 Wednesday, Sept. 9, at 7:30 p.m. in the American Legion Hall, at the junction of Route 14 and 3A.

The meetings are open to the public, and anyone wishing more information may call the president, Tom Doane, at 837-6717.

Please allow me to introduce myself to the town of Hanover and it's surrounding communities. I am originally from the South Shore area and graduated from Palmer College of Chiropractic in Davenport, Iowa. I have received extensive pre and post graduate training at the Gonstead Clinic of chiropractic in Mount Horeb, Wisconsin which specializes in the treatment and care of patients with structural problems of the spine. My practical experience includes six years of clinical work treating patients for various spinal related conditions utilizing X-ray analysis and a specific adjusting technique.

Being a licensed Chiropractor in the state of Massachusetts, I did an extensive demographic study of the South Shore region and decided the town of Hanover was centrally located to service patients from many communities. My new office is conveniently located on Route 53, one and one half miles south of the Hanover Mall exit 13. To aquaint you with our newly opened office and all that Chiropractic care has to offer, my staff and I would like to provide to you or another family member, a spinal examination absolutely FREE. Cohasset students report back from Europe

The apartments are all run down, there are many soldiers in the streets, you must not talk to, and there are hardly any stores and at the few stores there are lines for everything.

I had to spend the 25 DM so I bought a book about E. Berlin where the pictures make it look like the most beautiful city in the world which is a joke, and some sheet music for flute and violin. Other than that, there was nothing else to buy so we went into a cafe. We had coffee, but the sugar was hard as a rock, the cake was stale, and the milk was yellow and we only got about two drops.

As you can see, E. Berlin is not a happy place, but the most obvious part is the people. They just go about their daily business and you never see anyone playing music or laughing — not like W. Berlin! That night we went to the opera (in W. Berlin) and then to this excellent ice cream shop called Mövenoide's.

The next day we went to our second lecture about Berlin which was two hours long. After that we went to a Chinese restaurant and I taught everybody how to use chopsticks. Later we all went to the Berlin zoo.

On the ride home, we stopped in E. Germany to go to the bathroom and there was a sign that said you must pay .50 DM for the use of the toilet, water, and toilet paper. The toilet paper was as hard as a rock and it looked exactly like cardboard, and someone was actually there collecting the money.

I don't know too many German words yet, but I can really understand a lot. Right now I am writing in the livingroom because my father put the American top 40 on the radio for me. My mother is the best seamstress; she makes all her own clothes and some of Sabine's.

Say hello to everyone, and please share parts of this letter because I can't keep up with the letter writing!!

Jennifer Martin in Crete

Jennifer's letters are full of her excitement and enthusiasm for life on Crete. She enjoys the beautiful beaches and attending cafes with her sister, Irene, and various Greek friends. She has feasted and danced at weddings until dawn, attended an open-air theatre and hiked 16 kilometers over ledges and cliffs to a wonderful "hidden" beach.

This past week Jennifer and her family were involved in a craft fair which accompanied the internationally-known wine festival held on Crete.

Jennifer tells us the wine is free and people enjoy dancing and socializing all night long.

Cohasset Community Center fall classes listed

The Cohasset Community Center's new brochure for fall classes will be available Sept. 8. One of the new offerings this year will be a Kodaly music class taught by Lynn Ingraham.

The Kodaly method of music education is based on the philosophy of Zoltan Kodaly, a Hungarian composer and educator.

He suggests music training should begin nine months before the mother gives birth. The materials for Kodaly teaching are based on the regional folk literature of the children being taught.

The Kodaly concept is effective with both gifted and non-gifted children as well as children with special needs. Authentic children's folk songs, rhymes, and games are used in the classes. The classes provide musical experiences which are exciting, challenging, and fun. Through Kodaly teaching, you give children the tools to create their own music.

Lynne, who has a B.A. in Music from Upsala College and an M.A. in Music Education from Montclair State College, trained at the Kodaly Center of America for four summers. She also spent one summer training at the Zolton Kodaly Pedagogical Institute of Music in Kecskemet, Hungary. Lynne will be teaching classes for children 12 months through four years old. These classes will be scheduled Tuesday and Wednesday mornings from 9 to 11:30 a.m.

Another new program, the Duxbury Dance Shoppe, is coming to the Cohasset Community Center this fall. Nancy Gratta Tringali is the teacher of this new program. She began training at five years old with the Hazel Boone School of Dance. Nancy founded the Duxbury Dance Shoppe in 1981 and schedules a large recital each spring at the end of classes. "If children enjoy their dance classes," says Nancy, "they will stay with it and learn more. They will gain confidence and feel a sense of pride and accomplishment in their work. They will develop social skills and make friendships. Most of all, they will see that dancing is fun!"

Dance classes will be given Monday afternoons from 1:30 to 6 p.m.

Another new offering for fall will be a class for making doll house miniatures. This class will be taught by Melody Barclay and Linda Jarvis of Hingham. Children will learn to make picture frames, bulletin boards, food, decorator hats for front doors, gift packages and curtains for their doll houses. This class will be Thursday afternoon from 3 to 5 p.m.

Jean Armin will be at the Community Center again this year teaching two classes of creative dramatics. The purpose of informal drama is to provide a child with an avenue of expression in one of the arts and to guide the child's creative imagination. By providing a controlled emotional outlet, she hopes to give young people opportunities to grow in social understanding and co-operation.

Creative drama forces participants into other people's shoes. Being a character you don't necessarily like, but honestly trying to feel as he would feel, can prove to be a revelation to a child. Creative Dramatics classes are scheduled for Tuesday afternoons from 3 to 5 p.m.

Another new offering, Ingenue Charm Course, will be taught by Noreen DaRu Minichiello who is a former Carol Nash professional model and instructor. Noreen has been involved in all phases of fashion which includes runway and informal fashion shows, photography, promotion and television. Noreen's experience and knowledge of the field of modeling and fashion will be a guide for young girls to acquire confidence in themselves.

Charm classes will include general hygiene and grooming, walking, poise and exercising, proper use of make-up, wardrobe and accessories, personality awareness, and graduation. This class is Monday afternoon from 4 to 5:30 p.m.

Also new this year is our wrestling program for young boys. Doug Bell, a former State Champion and former New England High School Champion, will be coaching. This program is for boys who weigh 65 pounds or more. Doug will coach free style, folk style, and the Greco-Roman style of wrestling. This program is Tuesday evening from 6 to 8 p.m.

You must be a member of the Cohasset Community Center to participate in our programs. Membership is open to anyone for a small fee. Call 383-0088 for further information on classes or to register.

BOWLING ANYONE?

The Cohasset Community Center is looking for people interested in forming a new bowling league in the early afternoon. The new league will meet Friday afternoons from 12:30 to 2:30 each week.

Anyone interested in joining this new league can call Judy at 383-0088 or Kathy at 383-9112. This new league will start bowling Oct. 9. Call to reserve a place on the team.

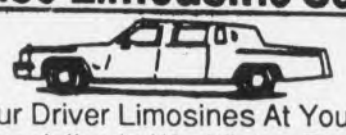
Edison Customers Conserve



"We appreciate the cooperation of our customers who voluntarily curtailed their use of electricity during last week's critical generating capacity situation in New England", said Arthur A. Hatch, president of Eastern Edison Company (EECo) today.

"The response of our customers -- residential, business and government alike -- was heartening," he said.

The week's heat wave, coupled with the region's continued economic growth, caused a record peak demand for electricity throughout New England. Eastern Edison Company's Brockton Division surpassed a previous peak demand of 304.8 megawatts (MW) established on July 24, 1987, when greater Brockton area customers used a record peak demand of 321.3 MW of electricity at noon Monday, August 17.

Eastern Edison Company and the New England Power Pool implemented emergency procedures, including a five percent reduction in voltage, public appeals to customers to avoid use of unneccessary electric appliances and lighting, and power purchases from neighboring pools.

Court rules in favor of local fisherman

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

A Superior Court justice has ruled against the town and in favor of a local resident who has been attempting for more than three years to place mooring floats in Bailey's Creek.

Justice Guy Volterra ruled Aug. 26 that efforts by the harbormaster and the town to prevent William Figueiredo from placing floats for 37 boats in Bailey's Creek is "so totally misplaced as to be capricious."

The town has 30 days to appeal this decision. Atty. Mark DeGiacomo, representing Harbormaster Harry Ritter, has filed an appeal, although selectmen have yet to discuss whether the appeal will actually be initiated.

Until the appeal issue is resolved, Figueiredo cannot place any floats in the water.

The Superior Court justice reiterated the opinion set forth in September, 1986 by the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) which approved a plan by Figueiredo to place the floats in Bailey's Creek, despite the opposition of the harbormaster.

Ritter contended that the floats were placed beyond the mean low water which was in violation of a permanent injunction prohibiting such a practice by the Parker Avenue resident. Ritter then ordered Figueiredo to remove the floats or file a new application with the floats placed in what the town deemed appropriate locations.

"This decision says the DEQE is correct and the court has sided in Mr. Figueiredo's favor," Atty. Chester Janiak said. He is Figueiredo's attorney. "But now we have to sit and wait to see if this latest decision is appealed."

In his decision, Justice Volterra stated that "This tension between the landowner and the town was expressed in litigation which took place (in 1984) in the Norfolk County Probate Court and culminated in a judgment of that court prohibiting Figueiredo from placing certain moorings in the harbor without the authorization of the Harbormaster.

Cohasset gets a curtain call

Hollywood is beckoning Cohasset once again.

This time, movie producers don't want to bring a group of conniving witches to our shores. This made-for-television movie will be a "four box of tissues tear-jerker" entitled, "A Rockwell Christmas."

Selectmen gave preliminary approval to the project which is set to start filming in October. Several items first have to be worked out, including approval by the EPA, the state and local officials to defoliate some trees around Cohasset Common and the village area. Production manager Marvin Miller explained to selectmen Monday night that defoliation is necessary to give the exterior shots a wintertime appearance.

Selectman Burt Pratt added his initial approval to the proposal, noting "I'll go along with a decent movie. If it was a sleazy bunch of garbage like the one this town loaned its name to last year, I'd say no."

Miller and Massachusetts Film Bureau representative Julie Wrinn assured selectmen this $3 and a half-million movie would be "very wholesome." Pratt noted that would be in sharp contrast to the movie filmed last summer in Cohasset, "The Witches of Eastwick."

But like that film, Wrinn explained, this television movie would be created by "the best of the best." Although no actors have yet been named, she said, the credentials of other crew members include such past projects as Lillies of the Field, Children of a Lesser God, Beverly Hills Cop II and Top Gun.

"We promised that Witches would be the best of the best. They were superb professionals. Once again, you

'Upbeat' year for schools

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

Going back to school may not be the trauma that the students of Cohasset High may be expecting.

"This is going to be a very upbeat and motivated year," said Superintendent of School Steve Hart. "There is a lot of spirit in the school. We want to instill a sense of pride. At the same time we are very serious about academics. We are offering some worthwhile activities and cutting down on study halls. More accurately we're trying to enable the students to get the most out of their time in school. The key is making course activities more appealing.

A lot of new faces will be there to surprise students on opening day. Patricia Brown will be the new METCO director. John Buckley will be taking over for Al McDonald at the helm of the Alternative school. Colleen Foley and Suzanne Parker will be joining the music department. Maura Devin and Margaret Lee will be joining the math department. The social studies department will also be sporting a new teacher, one of the finest young instructors to come Cohasset's way in some time, Scott Newkirk.

One new look in the High School according to Hart will be the implementation of team teaching at the seventh grade level. Four teachers will be working only with the seventh grade in all of the major subjects.

"They have done all of the scheduling," said Hart.

Cohasset's week . . .

Complaint withdrawn

A complaint filed by Barbara Bowen against selectmen charging them with discrimination has been withdrawn by the applicant. Bowen originally filed the complaint with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination.

Bowen filed the complaint in May, 1987, stating that selectmen failed three times to hire her as a Cohasset firefighter. Although she had obtained an equivalent test score, Bowen charged that selectmen passed her over.

Selectmen in turn have charged that Bowen falsified her records in applying for the firefighters' examination. Although Bowen is 35 years old, she stated on her original test application that she was 30. An applicant for the position of firefighter can not be over 33 years old. It was during a routine check of her valid drivers' license that town officials observed the discrepancy.

July 28, Bowen asked to withdraw the complaint. She told the commission "she had been given more specific reasons by the respondent (selectmen) regarding the decision not to hire her."

No kennel license

Town Counsel has ruled that a South Main Street resident should not be granted a kennel license needed to house his four dogs at that residence.

Atty. Richard Henderson advised the town clerk, who is responsible for issuing the licenses, that until Jack Livingstone obtains a zoning variance, he can not be granted a kennel license for the dogs.

Livingston was issued a kennel license at his former Summer Street residence. He has since moved to South Main Street along with his kennel and a new fence for which there is no building permit, according to Town Clerk Frances Marks. Since Livingston moved, the town clerk has not issued him a kennel license.

Livingstone's attorney advised the town to grant the residence a kennel license, saying the town had improper grounds for denial. Atty. Steven Wise said the zoning bylaw does not apply to noncommercial kennels. He also noted that the bylaw applies to kennels that are completely enclosed buildings and are at least 200 feet from any lot line. If the building that houses the kennel lies within 200 feet of all lot lines, as is the case with the Livingstone property, the bylaw is inapplicable, Wise stated.

But Town Counsel Henderson argued that although Livingstone may have had a valid nonconforming use on Summer Street, that use was abandoned when he moved to South Main Street. He stated that until Livingston obtains a variance, he can not be issued a kennel license.

Deck Point problems

Deck Point Inc. received some disturbing mail this week including a cease and desist order from the building inspector and stearn request from the conservation commission to attend their September 1, meeting.

Deck Point Inc. owns property at 119 King Street and is presently preparing the land for testing, according to the heatlh board. They will appear in front of the zoning board of appeals on Sept. 3, for a special permit to continue this testing.

The cease and desist order sent by the building inspector on Aug. 14, and the letter from the conservation commission were in regaurd to the cutting of numerous trees, large scale movement of earth and possible siltation problems.

The conservation committee also noted that there appears to be a stream that runs through part of the property.

Deck Point is currently considering the installation of low and moderate income housing on that property.

"They will eventually be filing with us," said Pat Buckley, acting chairman for the conservation commission.

Emergency planning

The Massachusetts Emergency Response Commission appointed the following residents to the emergency planning committee for Cohasset: board of selectmen, Rocco Laugelle; civil defense, Arthur Lehr Jr.; fire department, Chief Daniel Brock; police department, Chief Joseph Kealey; health agent, Joseph Godzik; highway surveyor, Harold Litchfield; conservation commission, Merle S. Brown; recreation department, Jack Worley.

The term of office is immediately effective and remains in effect until changed by an official order of the Massachusetts commission.

New assistant

Constance Jones, assistant town clerk for the past three and a -half years, retired from that position this week.

After advertising the position vacancy, Town Clerk Frances Marks hired Marion L. Douglas of Beechwood Street. Formerly, she had been secretary in the building inspector's office at town hall.

In informing selectmen of the personnel change, Marks noted that Jones' "job performance through her tenure has been nothing but the highest. She will be missed by everyone."

Fair housing agreement reached

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

The planning board finally reconciled differences with selectmen, the housing authority and the state Executive Office of Communities and Development. After hammering out several discrepencies the board lent their signatures to an agreement with the state promising to work towards more affordable housing in Cohasset.

The planning board was the last link in the agreement between the EOCD and the town to provide more affordable housing in Cohasset. This will allow Cohasset to continue to receive state funds for large projects that the state has threatened to cut off.

The planning board was mostly concerned with wording of many key phrases in the pact.

"I don't like signing a document with so many vaugeries that could come back and haunt the signer," said Robert Sturdy, chairman of the planning board.

Planning board members have not taken a negative stance toward the affordable housing issue. Each member heartily agreed with the one key sentence in the agreement which pledges to," establish specific goals to meeting the housing needs of the citizens."

"There is nothing that gives us the power to do anything about low-income housing," explained Sturdy. "Even if all the zoning by-laws were abolished we still wouldn't have affordable housing. Property in Cohasset is worth $40,000 to $50,000 without anything built on it. Only someone who was a fool would put it on the market at affordable prices when they could get three times that."

Ana Perez, regional director of the Massachusetts Housing Partnership, a subsidiary of EOCD was at the Aug. 26 meeting to answer planning board questions.

"It is possible to create more affordable housing with innovative financing," said Perez who also told the board that the state would look favorably on any proposals that the town might have.

The EOCD sets the rate of affordable housing at approximatly $95,000 for a three bedroom dwelling.

Planning board members reminded Perez that they have no restrictions on prices.

Cohasset had been previously labled, "unreasonably restrictive" according to Perez ,"based on what had been previously agreed to establish," in a 1984 agreement.

Alfred Moore summed up the feelings of the entire board, "If we are going to do this we ought to do it correctly and have something we can hang our hat on."

Selectman Rocky Laugelle pleaded with the board to make an effort to come to terms for this agreement.

"People that live in this town are losing their homes," said Laugelle, "They try , they work 2 and 3 jobs but it is very difficult. You have ripped this thing apart."

Planning board members denied accusations of being against low-income housing.

"We have room," said Daniel Cotton of the board, in reply to Laugelle. "We can take care of our people without putting a great big strain on the land situation here."

We are here in the spirit of cooperation," added Moore, "not to put vaugeries iin language into this thing Let's treat this as an important document, not as an eleventh hour document signed solely for the purpose of getting the state off our back for another year."

Chairman Sturdy related that his main concern is that with state aid local residents would not be able to qualify for the housing.

"I don't give a darn about the state to tell you the truth ," said Sturdy. "Let's go off on our own if that is what it takes."

Perez assured the board that many reasonable alternatives including state monies and support would be available.

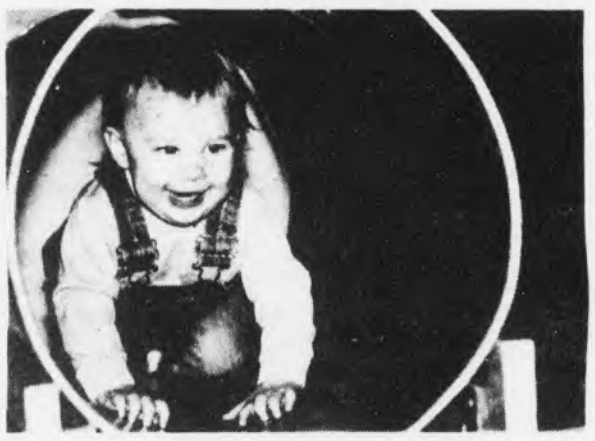
"Affordable housing is a two way street," said Perez." You are promising housing and the state is promising to help facilitate it. Your proposals will be well recieved."

In rough form the main tenets of the agreement between the state and the town are fivefold:

1) The town agrees to formulate an overall housing policy that will,"establish specific goals for the Town in defining and meeting the housing needs of its citizens." The Town will apply for a mini-grant from EOCD to hire a consultant to work with offficials in formulating this policy.

2) The Town will compile a "developable sight inventory." After the completion of this town boards will discuss potential sights where it would specifically recommend the development of housing for low and moderate income families.

3) The town will apply for funds to develop scattered site family housing through the state's Chapter 705 program. This program acknowledges a commitment to undertake new construction of non-residential buildings, identification of specific sites, and a commitment to make local contributions including land.



4)The Board of Selectmen and the Planning board will promote the, "inclusion of a component of low and moderate income housing in any new development."

5) The planning board will re-examine all of the town's by-laws and support changes to allow the development of low-income housing.

Two museums open through September

The Cohasset Historical Society's Capt. John Wilson Historical House and Maritime Museum at Cohasset Center will remain open through Wednesday, Sept. 30. These unique repositories of the town's history open their doors each afternoon except Mondays from 1:30 to 4:30.

The Capt. Wilson Historical House, originally a Cohasset Sea Captain's home, became the Society's first headquarters and museum building when it was given to the organization by local businessman William H. McGaw in 1936. Today the Capt. Wilson House contains antique home furnishings given to the Society and to its predecessor the earlier Committee on Town History, most of which were found in the oldest houses of Cohasset. Furniture, equipment, kitchenware, toys (including a mid-19th century doll house), china and stoneware, and artworks depicting local scenes fill the Capt Wilson House with the ambience of a time long past. The kitchen of an early home is represented by a large cooking fireplace complete with original iron crane. In the Wilson House the kitchen itself is found on the second floor, since the large room of the lower floor was designed as a small ship chandlery or marine supply store run by Capt. Wilson.

The house dates from 1810, having been built for the Sea Captain by Cohasset housewright and ship builder David Nichols. Though the Wilson house is not the earliest extant Cohasset home, it remains the only unmodernized dwelling to be found in the town. Here, the 20th century intrudes only slightly in this authentic early house.

Next door to the Sea Captain's residence the Historical Society's Maritime Museum honors Cohasset's long and illustrious seafaring traditions. Originally built as Samuel Bates' ship chandlery and counting house, this late 18th century building is one of only two structures which remain from the town's early years as a fishing and mercantile community. Originally located at the Harbor adjacent to Samuel Bates' stone wharf, the old chandlery was moved to its present location at Cohasset Center when given to the Historical Society by Mr. and Mrs. William Cox in the mid-1950's. Today the Maritime Museum holds the Society's collections relating to the town's great "Age of Sail". By the mid-1800's Cohasset rated high on the list of Massachusetts mackerel fishing ports and more than half a hundred large two-masted mackerel schooners called our town their home port. Owned and sailed by families named Bates, Tower, Hall, Lothrop, Pratt, Doane, Collier, Snow and others equally prominent in the seafaring years, the mackerel schooners and their allied industries were the single largest contributors to the town's economic well-being. Though the fishing era ended just before the 20th century opened, many artifacts, documents, pictures and prints of Cohasset's seafaring centuries are preserved at the Historical Society's Maritime Museum.

One of the greatest engineering feats of the mid-19th century took place in Cohasset with the construction of the second Minot's Ledge Lighthouse. Some of the history of this famous ocean light, sometimes called the most isolated and dangerous lighthouse in America, can be viewd at the Maritime Museum. During the entire 19th century, shipwrecks and lifesaving played an important role in the lives of Cohasset's residents. The untiring work of the town's volunteer lifesaving crews is commemorated at the Maritime Museum, and relics salvaged from some of the shipwrecks can be seen.

A collection of 19th century ship models also can be viewed, and the work of some of Cohasset's master carvers who created decorative figureheads and quarterboards for the schooner fleets. The Maritime Museum's second floor holds a large group of collections of both maritime and general historical interest. Early housewright's tools, a cordwainer's desk and equipment, stone tools of the American Indians some dating to the Woodland cultures which inhabited Cohasset's shores two millenia ago, antique hunting decoys from the 19th century era of "coot shooting", and a collection of "Lincolniana" relating to the Cohasset ancestors of President Abraham Lincoln are but a few of the unique collections found in the Maritime Museum.

This summer a special exhibit honors the Bicentennial of the American Constitution with pictures, prints, and documents relating to the 200th anniversary

Selectmen agree on King Street traffic light

Selectmen agreed this week that a plan to close a portion of King Street at Rte. 3A is a viable solution to the traffic problems on that residential road.

King Street residents also support the plan suggested last week by Stop and Shop developer Donald Staszko in which traffic signalization will be installed at the intersection of King Street and Rte. 3A. The plan, which was initially rejected by the planning board in 1985, but was approved by the board last week, would allow traffic to enter onto King Street through a sharp right angle traffic light.

Traffic would be allowed to proceed straight into the Stop and Shop parking lot or left towards Hingham from the light at the end of King Street. A right hand turn would be eliminated.

The square intersection will allow traffic to enter King Street from Rte. 3 A only if there is a green light.

King Street residents have been insistant in their repeated attempts to call attention to the speeding traffic problems on that road. After meeting with developer Staszko last week, several residents suggested that the road should be converted to one-way. Town meeting would first have to approve the change, but developer Staszko said he would be willing to pay the costs of closing the portion of King Street at Rte. 3A to make the street one-way.

After reviewing the traffic signalization plan, selectmen agreed to file for a permit with the state Department of Public Works. Approval by that state agency is necessary before construction can begin.

Nancy Garrison of King Street told selectmen Monday night that she was satisfied with the plan and with Staszko's assurances to provide the roadwork and landscaping to close a portion of the entrance into King Street.

"This plan answers many of our concerns," she stated. "Now you will come to a stop light and you can't barrel down King Street. We still want to address the closure at a later time. But this (signalization) is a reasonable configuration that is most easily convertible should the town accept closure of the street. This is an interim measure that will address many of our concerns, so we are mullified."

Staszko's attorney, Charles Humphreys, assured selectmen he would provide them with an amended plan which will state that Staszko will pay the King Street closure costs should town meeting approve the procedure.

Selectmen also suggested that no trucks over five tons be allowed on King Street, noting that trucks owned by homeowners or traveling on the street for business with a resident will be excluded from the regulation.

Selectmen voted to apply for a permit for the plan. Selectman Burt Pratt opposed the motion, stating the plan should be considered as part of a larger package to be presented to the town after more study.

In other action Monday night, selectmen appointed Mary J. Matthews of Scituate as town accountant. She will begin her duties at town hall Nov. 1 at an annual salary of $28,000.

She is currently employed as an accountant at Yankee Oil. But Selectmen Cliff Mitman, Martha Gjesteby and Rocco Laugelle expressed concern with her lack of municipal accounting experience.

Selectmen Pratt and James Gallagher said they were impressed with her background and argued she would quickly learn the town's accounting system. Executive Secretary Donald Andrew, who has served as interim town accountant following the resignation of Joanne Whittemore, agreed many of the best town accountants in the state did not have previous municpal experience before they were employed in their current positions.

Selectmen received 16 applications for the position and interviewed seven candidates. From the top three, one candidate withdrew his application Monday evening.

Selectmen did not act on a suggestion by Selectman Mitman to readvertise at a higher salary range. They voted 4 to 1 to hire Matthews. Selectman Gjesteby, who voted against the motion, stated, "I'm worried about her supervisory ability. I'd feel more comfortable with someone who had been a town accountant."

Selectmen voted to establish a traditional factor of one in order for assessors to establish a tax rate for fiscal 1988. The single tax factor will be used as a base to determine the commercial and residential tax rate for this year. Traditionally, assessor Tom Duggan stated, the town has used the same tax base for both commercial and residential. Using a higher tax base for commercial would place an unfair burden on the small amount of commercial property in town, he said. Currently, commercial property comprises only nine percent of the land in town.

Duggan told selectmen that barring any unforeseen circumstances, the tax rate may be set in a month.

In other business this week, selectmen endorsed an application which will be sent by the housing authority to the state Executive Office of Communities and development (EOCD). The local authority is applying for Chapter 705 fair housing funds. Although there will be no specific sites mentioned in the application, Executive Secretary Andrew said EOCD officials have expressed support for the application filing. "They know it is not site specific but they are still willing to entertain the application," he stated. "It's a positive step that shows good faith."

Selectman Pratt noted that in a meeting last week with town officials and Ana Perez from the Fair Housing Partnership, she "let the cat out of the bag", saying that because there has been little action by South Shore towns regarding fair housing opportunities, they will bend for communities attempting to solve the problem.

Selectmen did not take any action on a request by Firefighter Peter Trask to take a leave of absence from the department in the spring. Trask plans to attend the University of Massachusetts as a fulltime student. Until the fire chief comments on the proposal according to the regulations provided in the union's contract, selectmen said they can not make a decision on the request.

Selectmen approved a low bid of $6,800 to construct a septic system for the new town hall addition. Selectman Laugelle abstained from the vote to hire Paul Laugelle and Sons to complete the work.

☐ Welcome home to all of the AFS students that are coming home after their summers in foreign countries. Sure hope they will fill us in on all of their "happenings," we'll bet there are lots of stories to tell.

☐ Happy birthday to Mary Edmonds. We'll never tell her age (she's ageless anyway), but we sure can comment on the kind of life she's led . . . she has dedicated it to others, she is a grand person that is loved by all. Hope that your day is a special one!

☐ Congratulations to Jack Conway who is to be a featured speaker at the 23rd annual Mortgage Finance Seminar of the Greater Boston Real Estate Board at the World Trade Center on Sept. 28. He certainly is a busy man, and a very knowledgeable one!

☐ Finally, here's hoping that everyone has a great "last week before school." Now that the new clothes are purchased, the notebooks ready to go, and everyone is more than ready to learn, we only need good weather for the final pool day, and the cookouts that are sure to take place this weekend. Have fun! Let us know if anything special took place during your last week of summer, everyone would like to hear about it!

No appeal

Unless the town decides to keep this matter tied up in litigation through the end of this century, Bill Figueiredo will have his floats in Bailey's Creek .

For the past three years, the town has been deadlocked with the Parker Avenue resident in an attempt to keep him from placing mooring floats in the creek by his home. Although some may say it was a personal disagreement between two men, it eventually involved many more people and a lot of town money.

The harbormaster ruled against the float proposal, saying Figueiredo intended to place them below mean water level. That is his authority, as a town official - to review and decide whether moorings and floats are properly placed within the harbor and its channels.

Figueiredo, displeased with the official's verdict, appealed the decision to the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE), which is his right under the law. The state agency ruled against the harbormaster and designed a specific configuration that Figueiredo would have to follow for the placement of the 37-boat floats. Figueiredo agreed with the plan.

But the town appealed that decision which just last week resulted in a ruling against the town's complaint. A Superior Court justice stated that the DEQE was correct and reiterated the decision that Figueiredo could place the floats in Bailey's Creek.

And in the words of Chester Janiak, attorney for Figueiredo, the Parker Avenue resident hasn't ordered the wood for the floats just yet.

The town has another opportunity to extend this fight. They can appeal this latest decision against the harbormaster.

We are submitting our own appeal to selectmen right now. Don't do it. Don't waste the town's money and further this useless fight.

If the proper state agency has ruled in favor of the local fishermen, and improvised a specific float design for him to follow, then the town has little worry.

Many local boat owners are eagerly anticipating the prospect of 37 additional moorings in the harbor. And as long as these floats will not harm the navigation within the harbor channels, as DEQE and the court system have stated, then there will be no justice served by prolonging this needless quarrel.

The courts have ruled and that should be the final word on this subject. Perhaps this has been a case of a personal fight exploding into a conflagration which involves too many people, too much time and far too much money.

We say the white flag should be raised by the town. The battle is over and it's time to resolve problems, not instigate new fights while festering the old. We urge selectmen to drop any plans to appeal this latest decision. It is not a prudent use of our tax dollars. Enough have been swallowed by legal costs - most of which we acknowledge are legitimate and necessary.

This fight is over and it's time for town officials to admit defeat.

We applaud Figueiredo for his stubborn insistence to see this issue through to victory. We hope his success will assist local residents who are in dire need of additional harbor moorings.

NEWS ITEM — A draft environmental report finds proposed commuter rail restoration to South Shore would create noise, local traffic and parking problems, would displace business firms, particularly along the Greenbush Line from Braintree to Scituate. Numbers of workers displaced by takings not yet determined. Relocation assistance and expenses will be provided these businesses, according to the report prepared for the MBTA

Solution to pet overpopulation

Letters

To the Editor:

During the summer months, humane societies throughout the nation are inundated with litters of kittens and puppies and unwanted adult pets. Most of these animals must be killed, because no matter how hard humane societies try, there just aren't enough homes for all the animals. Over 17 million dogs and cats, puppies and kittens are killed in the United States each year. Only one out of every 10 kittens and puppies finds a home.

The only solution to the problem of pet overpopulation is the spaying and neutering of mixed breed pets before their first heat. Dogs and cats mature early; veterinarians recommend spaying for a female dog or cat at six months and neutering of a male of 6-8 months. If your pet is spayed or neutered early it is easier on her and less expensive for you.

Spaying eliminates the inconvenience of heat cycles and the two to three litters of kittens or puppies that are difficult if not impossible to place. Spaying before the first heat greatly reduces the possibility of your pet developing breast cancer and eliminates other health problems.

Early castration of the male pet prevents such incidents as roaming, fighting, urine marking and spraying, mounting in male dogs or howling in male cats.

The spayed and neutered pet is healthier and more people-oriented than the unneutered pet.

On the South Shore, since 1969 Standish Humane Society, an all volunteer organization, operating without a shelter, has worked to reduce pet overpopulation and to offer assistance to persons who cannot afford regular veterinary fees for the spaying or neutering of their pet. Standish Humane Society has 14 veterinary hospitals that participate in our low cost spay-neuter program. For more information, please call the Standish volunteer in Manomet 224-7373 for assistance on the South Shore or Middleboro at 947-1047 for assistance in the Lakeville, Taunton, Raynham area.

Each summer, Standish Humane Society receives an overwhelming number of calls about cats and kittens needing homes and abandoned cats and kittens. Our minishelters are full, because we do not euthanize healthy cats and kittens, we do not have room for the many unwanted cats and kittens on the South Shore.

Right in our area, cats and kittens, dogs and puppies are dying needlessly. What can you as an individual do?

1. Be sure that your own pet is spayed or neutered.
2. Tactfully mention to owners of unspayed and unneutered animals all the advantages of spaying and neutering. Pass on the numbers of the Standish volunteers, 224-7373 and 947-1047 to people who cannot afford regular veterinary fees.
3. Be aware and become involved. A litter of abandoned kittens sat in the bushes in front of a local library for at least 24 hours before someone picked them up. If you see an abandoned animal or a mistreated pet, report your concerns to the animal control officer or humane society.
4. Make a donation to the Standish Humane Society to help with the spay neuter program. Tax deductible donations may be sent to Box 824, Scituate, 02066.
5. Join the Standish Humane Society. Right now we are dependent on a small number of volunteers to do a great deal of work. If you are interested in volunteering, please call 934-5498 or 545-2808.

Thank you,
Suellen Conlon

Conservatory arts enrichment class

The South Shore Conservatory in Hingham has some openings in its Arts Enrichment program for children four and a half, who will be in pre-kindergarten or kindergarten in the fall.

The class meets two days a week on Monday and Wednesday, or on Tuesday and Thursday from 1 to 3 p.m. at the Conservatory, off 19 Fort Hill Street in the former naval depot.

The class is designed to supplement the school experience thru arts education. Space in the program may be reserved for fall or spring now, depending on which session of kindergarten the child will attend. In this class the children will explore various arts and crafts including forty five minutes of music once a week. In addition the Conservatory faculty will visit the class to give demonstrations in music, drama and dance during the program.

Those who are enrolled in the arts program will be eligible for the new Reading Readiness program on Fridays from 1 to 3 p.m. The Friday class will prepare the children to read by introducing them to the alphabet and the sounds of letters. They will not actually be learning to read, but getting ready to read.

Maureen Connolly, head teacher of the Conservatory Preschool, will conduct the classes. She is a graduate of Bridgewater State College in Early Childhood education and she also trained at the New England Montessori Education Center in Boston.

For further information and a catalogue about the fall classes at the South Shore Conservatory call 749-7565 Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Former student pays tribute to 'second father'

A teacher affects eternity; he can never tell where his influence stops.

Henry Brooks Adams

I am not willing that this discussion should close without mention of the value of a true teacher. Give me a long hut, with only a simple bench, Mark Hopkins (president of Williams College 1836-1872) on one end and I on the other, and you may have all the buildings, apparatus and libraries without him.

James Abram Garfield

When classes start next week for the 1987-1988 academic year, Ed Sheehan won't be among the faculty greeting students at Cohasset High School.

Ed died on June 10 after undergoing heart surgery at Massachusetts General Hospital.

His absence, after 28 years in the Cohasset schools, will be felt on opening day and many other days by students and colleagues, as it is felt daily by his family in East Weymouth, where he lived for 20 years, and by the many friends in left behind.

Ed never forgot he was a journalist and delighted in the opportunity to write a story for the Weymouth News. He contributed over the years to many of our annual historical issues. He always tackled every assignment with his perennial enthusiasm and he never missed a deadline.

How ironic that it was Ed's heart that gave out. Although he was a deeply thoughtful man, a writer who knew how to express those thoughts and just when to do so, you could truthfully say of Ed Sheehan, he wore his heart on his sleeve.

No, he wasn't merely sentimental. He was a man who cared about the things in life worth living and dying for. He cared about his wife of 31 years, his four children, his kids, to whom he had given 30 years of his life in the classroom, his church, his town.

His colleagues and eulogists from Cohasset High, both singled out Ed's compassion, unselfishness and tolerance speaking at their friend's funeral Mass in Immaculate Conception Church in East Weymouth.

"He never said it but I think his philosophy was 'Let me love you, let me care about you, let me teach you and in return maybe you'll love me, care about me, and learn from me,' " Jack Leary said.

"He had a special way of making you feel like a hero for anything that you did for him.....His unshakeable faith in God allowed him to accept and handle whatever was put into his life each day," Kearin Dunn said.

Ed Sheehan knew how to savor life. His enthusiasm was catching. Because he was a teacher that enthusiasm flowed over into many lives.

A few weeks after Ed's untimely death, his widow, Mary, received a letter of condolance from one of her husband's former students.

The late Ed Sheehan as he appeared in 1965 Cohasset High School Yearbook dedicated to him.

It is a touching tribute to Ed Seehan. And it's also a heartening exhortation to all teachers who will be returning to their classrooms in just a few more days.

The text of that letter follows:

Dear Mrs. Sheehan,

I was saddened and shocked to hear from my mom that Mr. Sheehan had passed away. I am very sorry.

As we all do, we think immediately back to the times we spent with that person. However, the interaction I had with Mr. Sheehan was profoundly different than merely casual. He was a kind and influential leader and teacher to me in a key time in my life — those years where a kid rides the fence and makes decisions and does things that will shape the rest of his life.

I learned many things from him, most of them the kind of things that aren't taught in schools or books. To say he helped me would be understating. I am, today, what I am, because people like your husband took the time to teach me right from wrong.

It's really hard to say where I might have ended up otherwise. And I was not alone. Judging from the way your children are today, I'd say that they learned from him as I did.

. I hope I am not rambling. I had the opportunity, through school, sports, church and Scouting, to meet many people who could have influenced me along the way. I was, and am, very fortunate that Mr. Sheehan was one of them. While I had many "second fathers," he was one of the finest.

My thoughts and prayers are with you, and with Ted, Dan, Karen and Kathy. I will always fondly remember Mr. Sheehan. I thank him, and I'll miss him.

God bless you. Please take care, and let me know if I can ever be of any help to you.

President Glenn Pratt called the center "the new catalyst for family life in Cohasset" and called for support from all the townspeople.

The event was geared to Cohasset people in the real estate, banking, building and travel industries.

Robert Jordan of Lothrop Lane, the director of fundraising, stated that "we have raised over $160,000 this year but we will need about $200,000 in additional funds to complete and furnish the large addition.

Ozzie Ingram, chairman of the Cohasset Savings Bank was thanked by the host and center director Jack Conway for the bank's $6,000 cash gift as well as for the commitment to provide mortgage funds to complete the project.

Hostesses Patricia Conway and Mary Ellen Neagle distributed pledge cards to all the attendees and predicted that the fundraiser would yield about $5,000 in addition to the Cohasset Savings Bank gift.

President Pratt thanked Sam Fry of Scituate's Satuit Restaurant and the Satuit-owned Turner's Package Store also of Scituate for donating refreshments for the successful fundraiser.

Providing a recent tour of the Community Center renovations were: Bob Jordan, chairman of the Center's fundraising committee; Osborne Ingram, chairman of the Cohasset Savings Bank, Jack Conway, host of last week's benefit, and Glenn Pratt, president of the board of directors. (Alan Chapman)

SENIOR CENTER NEWS
Message from the Director:

For most of us, companionship and security are vital to our sense of well being. Yet for many older people they lose their spouses, siblings, or friends at a time when they need them most. When this happens a person feels isolated and alone and cut off from much needed social contracts. Older people who can no longer adequately care for their homes, travel easily by themselves, have difficulty in walking or performing needed activities such as shopping and cooking have an added problem of losing at least part of one's independence.

Such people can benefit from the variety of services and programs which are offered by the Council on Aging and other community based programs. These services include the New Friends Program, Home-Care, transportation, home delivered meals, Keep Well Clinics, Geriatric Counseling, Tuesday lunches, volunteer opportunities, employment, Sixty Plus Club, educational and recreational activities and much more.

Each month the "Senior Vista" has information on a variety of subjects of interest to Senior Citizens and the community at large. If you or someone you know would like to be on the monthly "Senior Vista" mailing list, please contact the Council on Aging at 383-9112 or stop at the office.

Have an enjoyable fall season and please join us for the many new wonderful programs starting October 5th in our newly completed addition in the Community Center.

Horizon helps Jimmy Fund

The weekend of August 8 and 9, the staff of Horizon Media and over 800 bicyclists banded together to raise funds for the Dana Farber Cancer Research Institute, the Jimmy Fund.

The "bikers" pedalled their way from Sturbridge to Provincetown as the main event of the Pan-Mass Challenge. This 192 mile bike trek featured nearly 900 riders, males and females of all ages, riding for per mile pledges for the Jimmy Fund. Everyone spent Saturday night at the half way point, at Mass. Maritime academy.

Horizon Media, at the same time, was preparing a documentary video of the event. From the early morning start, to the overnight stop at Mass. Maritime, to the exciting finish in Provincetown, the production features action shots of the riders on the go and in depth interviews, as well as a touching section filmed at the Dana Farber Institute.

The final event of the Challenge will take place in December when all the bikers will be invited back to share in the "check presentation". Then the funds raised, expected to be in excess of $600,000, will be turned over to representatives of the Dana Farber Institute. The entertainment for that evening will focus on the debut of Horizon's Video production along with the unveiling of a new slide show prepared by photographer/biker Rich Bonanno of Scituate.

Movies beckon Cohasset

will be dealing with superb professionals," Wrinn added.

Filming is expected to begin October 12 for about 22 days which will include about eight nights of filming around the village. The television movie is scheduled to air on NBC Dec. 20.

Miller and Mass. Film Bureau official Michael Dick, who will be liaison with this project, told selectmen that Rockport is also being considered as the central filming location. Dick said he and the film's production designer traveled through 75 Massachusetts communities two weeks ago, searching for the perfect New England community. "Cohasset," Dick stated, "had all the right pictoral elements. It had the beautiful church on the common, and a shopping district with the right look for this film."

Cohasset had all the right pictoral elements. It had the beautiful church on the common and a shopping district with the right look for this film.

— Michael Dick

According to production manager Miller, "A Rockwell Christmas" will take place in 1944, during the height of World War II. It focuses on the lives of one family whose eldest son is a captain assigned to overseas duty. Another son is about to go overseas and another son is left at home, too young to fight in the war. "It's a very sentimental picture," Miller said. "There is no violence. It's a very beautiful picture based on some of Rockwell's paintings."

The production manager noted that because the film's background will have to resemble a New England community in 1944, there will be some exterior changes made to store fronts, including old-fashioned Christmas ornaments. Cars driven during that period will have to be brought in during the filming, he added. The exterior of a Cohasset home will be used as the family's residence, and another home will be used for interior filming.

But most importantly, Miller said, a few trees may have to be defoliated because of the winter-time background of the film. Members of the movie crew have spoken to experts at the University of Massachusetts and EPA officials regarding safe methods to strip leaves off the trees.

Not until he and town officials are satisfied that this process can be completed safely should permission be given to defoliate the trees, Miller said. Executive Secretary Donald Andrew said Tree and Park Supt. Peter Laugelle has indicated it can be done safely and because of the lack of rain this season, the leaves will be falling from the trees early this autumn.

Also included in the list of special effects in the film will be snowfall in several exterior scenes. There are three methods of producing the artificial flakes, Miller explained, including foam, biodegradable soap shavings that have to be vaccumed from the affected areas, or styrofoam cutouts mixed with ice.

"We will try to cause the least amount of confusion," the production manager said. "But as you know, something might happen. Not everyone will be happy that a film crew is in town, but I will do my best to allay those fears."

This will not be an action film, he said. It is a sentimental story narrated by a Western Union messenger who passes by a billboard which will be constructed along the common. The billboard will list the names of the men who are serving in the war and will designate one-by-one those who have been killed.

"If defoliating the trees is a problem, then I would recommend to the producers in Hollywood that we not do the film until later," Miller said. "Then we may have snow and the trees will already be defoliated."

The timetable for production will be brief, he said, because the film has already been scheduled by NBC for a December 20 airing. "It is the type of movie I hope will be shown every year," he added.

Miller said several towns have been considered, including communities in other states.Rockwell's hometown of Stockbridge was considered "too cute" for the movie, and other New England villages were not convenient from the airport. The movie will also be filmed in Hollywood studies and in New York.

There will be a central cast of five in the movie. Extras for the film will be provided from the local area, Miller said.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle said he made a personal, informal survey during the filming of Witches last summer. Overall he thought the community "took it well, although it was inconvenient at times which was tough."

The film, produced by NBC Productions, Inc., will be a two-hour television movie. Officials from the Mass. Film Bureau said a decision on the location and more details on the production will be finalized within a few weeks.

Figueiredo wins

"Subsequent to the judgment, the parties continued to squabble over the issue since Figueiredo continued to annually set his floats in an area contiguous to his land which Cohasset maintained was beyond mean low water."

June 10, 1986, Harbormaster Ritter requested that Figueiredo file an application for the floats. The Parker Avenue resident submitted a plan by Perkins engineering delineating the location of the floats. The application was rejected by Ritter who stated the floats were placed beyond mean low water.

Figueiredo filed an appeal with the DEQE July 11, 1986.

According to the decision by Justice Volterra, DEQE has the authority under state law to confirm, modify or impose its own conditions and restrictions. The DEQE decision overruled the harbormaster and imposed its own conditions. According to the Superior Court justice, "The DEQE was of the opinion that compliance with the judgment (by Harbormaster Ritter) would effectively preclude or severely inhibit the docking of vessels since the water depth would be typically less than one foot. In short, Figueiredo's floats could not be used by boatmen and would be useless.

"The DEQE found little or no adverse impact upon navigation in the fairway of Bailey's Creek by this facility as modified by the DEQE agency action.

"The DEQE found the harbormaster's contention that Figueiredo's floats constituted an obstruction to navigation as meritless, and the Harbormaster's further argument that the floats cannot be placed where they are presently located because they are channelward of the mean low water mark as so totally misplaced to be capricious."

According to Justice Volterra, the Harbormaster argued that the 1984 probate Court ruling prevented Figueiredo from setting any moorings beyond the mean low water mark and that the DEQE does not have any authority in this matter.

"This misses the mark entirely," he stated in his decision last week. "The DEQE did not, by properly engaging in its review of the Harbormaster's action, seek to change or circumvent a judgment of judicial branch of government."

He explained that state law provides a system of annual permits for the placement of floats in the harbor. "To construe the judgment of the Probate Court as a permanent injunction prohibiting the placement of floats below the mean low water by Figueiredo would violate the clear terms of this statutory scheme established by the legislature to provide for an orderly annual review of harbor moorings and floats. Moreover, a permanent injunction forever barring Figueiredo from setting moorings and floats in Bailey's Creek would be violative of the principle of primary jurisdiction which is the bed rock of administrative law."

He concluded that the decision of DEQE which approved Figueiredo's floats in a precise configuration "is not arbitrary or capricious, and it is in conformity to law." Justice Volterra then stated that the appeal by the harbormaster against DEQE is dismissed.

An upbeat year for students . . .

"This should provide more direct involvement between the students and the teachers. It kind of works out well with the 90 kids in that grade."

Hart is anticipating about 1170 students in the school system this year, roughly the same amount as last year.

"We are registering new kids right now," said Hart. "There appears to be quite a few new students but with people moving and what not we never know until school starts," added Hart.

Hart exlained that the enrollment is not an easy thing to predict.

"This appears to be the year that enrollment is leveling off, and maybe starting to move up slightly. It is hard to say; it was projected that we would have 3000 kids in the system by this year at one point."

The possibility of the Osgood School being vacated for other town uses does not seem to enter into the picture at this point.

"In reality Osgood could be considered overcrowded," said Hart. "There is no cafeteria and at this point there are no free classrooms. We have absolutely no space and no rooms available. The library is very small. The circumstance will dictate however the situation and we will see what we can do."

As for the future of the enlargement of Deer Hill, Hart seemed optimistic.

"There are benefits in having one school but it would require substantial additions. Right now Deer Hill would need twelve more classrooms to accommodate grades K to 3. As for now Osgood is still a nice school; there is no reason to abandon it."

Opening day for everyone aside from the seventh grade will be on Wednesday Sept. 9, bright and early. The seventh grade will have a preview day on Tuesday to solve any logistics problems that may occur from being in a new and much bigger school.

"It will be a day when no one will be embarrassed about asking any questions," said Hart.

Conducted by Scituate Flotilla 1207 of the U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary, the course will include instruction on coastal piloting, seamanship, navigation rules, weather forecasting, knot tying and splicing, radio-telephone communications and handling power boats in fair and foul weather.

Senator Kerry: Reagan should pull Contra aid

By Kelly Williams
Mariner correspondent

The Reagan Administration should test the integrity of the Nicaraguan regime by pulling back the US-backed Contras, U.S. Sen. John F. Kerry told a crowd of 250 people at the Hingham Town Hall Barnes Auditorium Monday.

"What would make more sense than to test the integrity of Nicaragua," Kerry said. "Then we could say those guys are lying or look at what those people are doing to move forward."

Kerry has represented Massachusetts in the Senate since his election in 1984 and is serving on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. He was invited to share his view of the Central American crisis by the South Shore Committee Against Intervention in Central America.

The Hingham based citizens' group was created in 1984 to support peace in Central American countries.

Kerry said pulling back the Nicaraguan rebels (Contras) would give the Nicaraguan government a chance to lift its marshal law and stop its civil rights violations.

He supported a bilateral peace plan in Central America and condemned the Reagan Administration's Central American policy to support the Contras.

"It's the most craven, hollow, basically political policy I've ever seen that is willing to lose American lives," he said. "If there is one lesson that we learned from Vietnam, it is that you don't put American interests on the line without bringing to a consensus a bipartisan policy."

Reagan's policy to aid the Contras has failed to reach a bipartisan agreement and has split the Senate 47 to 53 in favor of the aid. Without a bipartisan agreement a policy is unusable, he said. "This is a problem for the administration which they have been unwilling to face."

President Ronald Reagan has said he would like to give over $100 million in military aid to the rebel fighters, but even CIA officials have said the Contras will be unable to win the war against the Sandinista Government no matter how much aid they receive.

Of the $3.5 billion in aid given to the Contras, 67 percent has been in military assistance. Of the $27 million in humanitarian aid given to the Contras (which was monitored) only half was ever accounted for by the federal government.

The Contras have relied on the US aid since the Sandinista National Liberation Front (FSLN) ousted the US-supported dictator Anastasio Somoza in Nicaragua in 1979. Since then, the Contras have fought to regain control over the Nicaraguan government.

Kerry said right-wing pressure is forcing Reagan to continue his fight to support the Contras and that he will not leave office without implementing his policy against the Nicaraguan government. He noted administration officials have said they would like to leave the crisis for the next administration to deal with.

"The great battle right now is whether we should dump the whole thing on the Democrats, and there are a lot of people that believe that that is what we should do," he said.

He said the question of further military aid to the Contras, which is against international law, is "hanging in a peace balance" in the Senate.

"I think it's a one-vote margin or dead even. We have 10 Democrats who voted with Reagan," he said. Although we're a majority in the Senate, we're not a majority of the vote."

Kerry said the timing has to be right in order to swing the vote against aid to the Contras, or they could face a loss. If peace plans fail, the Senate would vote in favor of aid to the Contras.

"It's dicy. You have a chance to box the administration and the administration is scared to death of peace," he stated.

Kerry called the administration's claim of Soviet support of the Nicaraguan government being a threat to our national interest "ridiculous."

"I find it hard to understand how our interests could be threatened when five Central American presidents are satisfied with a peace plan, or how we can be threatened by a country of only 3.5 million people," he said.

"I don't want a Soviet base in Central America. I don't want Cuban and Soviet troops in Central America, but I believe we can achieve our goals without resorting to violence. I think there is a better way," he added.

He said the US should support the regional peace pact signed recently by Salvadorian minister Ricardo Acevedo Peralta; Miguel D'Escoto of Nicaragua; Alfonso Cabrera Hidalgo of Guatemala; Rodrigo Madrigal Nieto of Costa Rica; and Carlos Lopez Contreras of Honduras. The peace plan calls for cease-fires in region's civil wars.

Kerry said the Senate has created a subcommittee of three Democrats and three Republicans to observe US negotiations with Nicaragua for a peace plan. The committee will make judgement of whether the US is working to make the plan work.

The outcome of that peace plan will greatly affect the Senate's vote on the military aid.

Kerry said he is also continuing to investigate reports from the State Department that some Contras have been involved in drug trafficking despite resistance from government officials.

"I've been hanging out there alone on this one," he said. "We are fighting CIA and FBI resistance. We are struggling."

He said he was only able to get one full-time staff person to work on the investigation which has slowed the process down. But some residents in the audience lashed out at Kerry for dragging his feet on the investigation.

"I'm not dragging my feet," he said. "I am not about to be irresponsible and come out and make accusations without the evidence to back them up."

Local athlete sets sights on the Ironman

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

Garret DeVos has a hand in everything.

DeVos was recently awarded the opportunity to compete in the Ironman Triathalon World Championship in Hawaii. The October 10 event, which will be televised nationally, is the creme de la creme of world class endurance events.Only 1200 athletes are picked each year from a very impressive field of over 4000 applicants. The race course in Kona, Hawaii, begins with a 2.4 mile ocean swim. The swimmers then depart the water and mount bicycles for a 112-mile ride on paved roads over dry lava fields. A 26.2 mile marathon course is the final leg of the race.

DeVos, 48, is employed by the United Nations and most often can be found travelling between Geneva and third world countries in Africa and South America. This summer DeVos has been leading classes in entrepreneurship at Northeastern University.

DeVos' position in the diplomatic service branch of the United Nations sends him all over the world.

"I always take my gear along," said DeVos,"I'm running through Pakistan, and people look at me as if I am crazy."

DeVos has an English aluminum folding bicycle that goes into a bag and weighs only twelve pounds.

"Most of the hotels I stay in have very nice pools to train in," added DeVos.

The race starts promptly at 7 a.m. on Saturday morning. The majority of the contestants will still be on the course after dark.

DeVos submitted an athletic resume to Ironman officials and was immediately accepted into the elite field of contestants. Then again, not too many people have even come close to conquering some of the feats of endurance that DeVos has accomplished.

DeVos has competed in swimming races from Switzerland to France over seven kilometers of Lake Geneva. He has also completed the more than 10 mile swim from Point Judith Rhode, Island to Block Island.

"Swimming is very self-inflicting and solitary," says DeVos. "You feel the pain much more. I try to talk away the pain. I like to swim on my back. When I can look at the mountains and the birds I don't get as tired."

"At the end of certain swims I have been so tired that I had trouble making the motion with my head that you have to make to get air. It became so difficult that I realized how people must feel when they are drowning. It is a very thin line and I came close to crossing it," said DeVos.

Garret DeVos

"I don't know if the swimming will be my strongest point, the Ironman course is only 2.4 miles," said Devos, this is like a sprint; I would be better off if it were 8 or 9 miles.

As far as the bicycle portion of this event is concerned, DeVos is a natural.

"I grew up on a bicycle," said DeVos, "I'm from Holland and bicycling is such a natural thing for us. Apparently in Hawaii you have to buck quite a head wind. In Holland we have 40 to 50 mile an hour head winds. They are very specific in the rules that you must keep a two bike difference between you and the other competitors. There is absolutely no drafting another bike or you will be disqualified."

DeVos is an effortless runner as many people in Cohasset will contest. Summer days will find DeVos eating up the local roadways. Sometimes running to the pool or the ocean to go swimming or maybe just running for fun. DeVos ran in the Geneva, Switzerland marathon in May.

"The Geneva marathon is two loops so when you complete one you think, Oh, no, I'm only halfway through."

DeVos has run in many local races including the Boston Marathon and the Newport Marathon.

"There are many international differences. Boston is a great race; there is a terrific party atmosphere. People extend a hand; you get strength from other people. Geneva, for instance, is a very international city with people from all of the European continents and it takes longer to communicate certain things. There is a very common behavior in Boston; the people are much more friendly."

Among DeVos other athletic accomplishments is his recent ascent of Mt. Blanc in France, one of the hardest mountains to climb in the world.

"It was beginners luck," says DeVos, "I would never do it again."

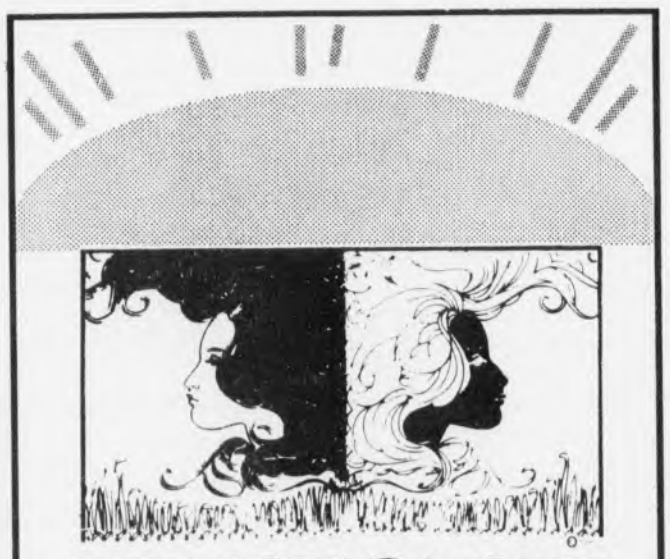
"It was things like that though that looked interesting on my athletic resume, which could be a reason for them allowing me to compete in this event," added DeVos.

Forty-eight is certainly not the average age of most triathletes.

"When you pass forty you are much worse off than you think you are," agreed DeVos, "Your body takes more of a pounding and it lets you know."

"At this point, however," reflected DeVos, "you are not racing. It has got to be fun. It is important to have endurance and to introduce and sustain self-discipline in your life. There have got to be goals or you feel like an idiot. I feel great. This triathlon is really not the big thing as a lot of people think."

DeVos has lived in Cohasset for the last eight years with his wife Merilyn and his daughter Veronica.



"I've enjoyed it very much; it's a lovely town. You might say I consider myself a Cohasseter."

"It is tough to keep slim here in America," said DeVos, "Everyone eats large amounts. You might see me crawling across the finish line," DeVos joked.

Cohasset women enjoy BYU

Polly Doggett of Hugh Strain Rd. and Pat Purcell of Sohier Street have returned from Provo, Utah where they attended Education Week at Brigham Young University. For one week in August the campus is opened each year to over 20,000 adults with a choice of 1100 subjects taught by members of the BYU faculty.

Purcell who is a family counselor and therapist here in Cohasset, took courses pertaining to substance abuse and treatment and also classes on gerontology. Doggett took a smattering of subjects that interested her. "I had always wanted to hear Stephen R. Covey speak as he is a noted and popular lecturer on organizational behavior, and I managed to get a seat in the 1000 seat hall by arriving early and queing up," she said. Another favorite speaker, she said, was Daryle Hoole, lecturer and author on the subject of "Making Your House a House of Order". That, too, was filled to capacity, she said.

People back East sometimes wonder why we should go "away off to B.Y.U. to get educated" but Doggett has several answers for them. One, son Dana Doggett and family live out there, and two, because of the spirit of the college, she said. The students are very friendly and the faculty most helpful. They found it fun living for a bit in the West, on a beautiful campus, so close to the mountains you can almost "reach out and touch them!"

The two women were able to talk with Bonnie Keegan Winterton, a life-long Cohasset resident now married and living with her family of five in Salt Lake City. She asked to be remembered to her friends back here.

Dana Doggett, until recent years, a "native son" of Cohasset is involved with his work as an engineer at Novell in Provo. He has been asked to teach a new graduate course this fall in Computer Science at the University.

What are the plans for next year for Pat and Polly? Well, to return to BYU and "do it all over again!" they both eagerly agreed.

Auditions will be held in Plymouth and Boston during September. Interested musicians should call (617) 746-8008 for information and to schedule auditions/interviews.

In 1987-88, its seventy-second season, the orchestra will give five full-scale concerts scheduled from September to May. Soloists includes pianist Arthur Greene, trumpeter David Bilger and the Butch Thompson Trio from "A Prairie Home Companion".

Led by Music Director Rudolph Schlegel, the Plymouth Philharmonic Orchestra is widely recognized for the artistic level of its performances, its innovative programming and the high caliber of its soloists.

Cinderella puppet show

One of the most beloved of all children's fairy tales, "Cinderella" has been made into an enchanting musical puppet play by Eleanor Boylan's Cape Ann Puppeteers and will be given three performances in Cohasset in September.

This colorful production, sponsored by the Cohasset Community Center, features delightful hand puppets of all the familiar characters: the Fairy Godmother, the two Silly Sisters, the handsome prince, and the special member of the cast, Cinderella's cat, Snowy, who helps her through to the happy ending.

Hailed by the Puppet Show Place in Brookline as one of their most successful offerings, "Cinderella" will be presented Friday, September 25 at 7 p.m., Saturday, September 26 at 11 a.m. and Sunday, September 27 at 2:30 p.m.

This show is sponsored by the Cohasset Community Center but will be presented at the Deer Hill Cafeteria. Admission is $2.50. The Deer Hill School is located on Sohier Street just before the South Shore Music Circus.

News of the Parish

This Sunday marked a bitter/sweet note. Ellen Fryling was at the organ as our official music director for one last time before her retirement effective August 31. Plans are underway for a retirement "celebration" in October or November. You might want to make a special effort this Sunday to hear a truly superb organist and worship leader.

Guest organist and choir director for the month of September (while our search continues) will be Robert Leavitt.

Music director search will hopefully be concluded by the end of September. Application has been made by the committee to the Boston Chapter of the American Guild of Organists who will post our opening to all members of the Guild in the area. We have also asked one of our candidates to come and be a guest organist and rehearse and direct the choir for either the 13th or the 20th of September. The next "Village Beacon" will have further details.

Village Beacon to re-start weekly publication with the September 13 issue. Typing is done on Tuesday mornings—so please have your articles in before that time!

Village Fair: Only 123 shopping days til Christmas! The Central Committee for the Village Fair has been planning all summer to make our 1987 Village Fair a success. But we need your support. From the Second Congregational Church we need representatives (notice I didn't say chairpersons) for various tables such as: Children's Table, Secret Room, Plans, Wreaths, Books, Children's Activities. If you would like to find out more about being a representative, call Debbie Anderson 383-6345, or Linda Campbell, 383-0021. SUPPORT YOUR FAIR!

Baptised Sunday: (August 23) Colin Hull Magruder, born December 6, 1986 in Wellesley, Mass. to Susan and John Magruder.

Youth News: The Youth Group composed of 9th through 11th graders will have its first meeting (A PIZZA PARTY) of the year on Thursday, September 17 at 6 p.m., beginning with recreation on the Common (Bates Hall if it rains). Each person to bring $1 to help defray food costs. As always, friends are welcome and a special invitation will be sent to the Cohasst churches who may not have an active teenage youth fellowship program to come along and join us. Advisors this year will be Mike and Julie Wasp and Craig and Jean Muir.

Program to serve mental health clients

The new Family Support Services program of South Shore Mental Health Center (SSMHC) has named Sonja Kenney, B.A. (University of Pennsylvania) to the position of Family Support Advocate.

This newly created position provides a new service for those families who care for a mentally ill family member in the home.

South Shore Mental Health Center is the oldest and largest community mental health center in the nation, serving Cohasset and Hingham.

Kenney will be available to help families negotiate the mental health provider system, and to advocate for families requiring services from other health care providers.

Family advocacy is one of four services offered under the Family Support Services program at SSMHC. Funded by a $110,000 grant from the state Dept. of Mental Health, the program also provides in-home and out-of-home respite, as well as educational seminars and workshops for families.

All services under the new program are offered free to families.

Start-up of the program began in July, with the first in-home respite provided in August. In-home respite provides a "special" to remain at home with a mental health client, allowing the family time off from caregiving.

"We're trying very hard to match our "specials" to the client," reported program manager Valerie Kroon, M.S.W. "This helps make respite an exciting and rewarding experience for all involved."

Dukakis launches 'keep moving' program

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and Elder Affairs Secretary Paul J. Lanzikos today announced the fourth annual Governor's Cup to be held in Boston on Saturday, September 26.

On that day some 4500 older adults from across the Commonwealth will join celebrity Chairman Bobby Orr, and senior marathoners Johnny Kelly and Ruth Rothfarb, to participate in a one mile fun walk, a three mile competitive walk, and a five mile Masters road race.

"Picture 400 older adults walking through downtown Boston in celebration of fitness," said Dukakis. "Exercise has been a part of my life and I strongly encourage all people forty years and older to join this year's celebration."

The annual Governor's Cup event is part of the Executive Office of Elder Affair's "Keep Moving" fitness campaign, a walking club program designed for older adults. Throughout the state, over 5600 seniors have joined community-based walking clubs to exercise regularly in the company of new and old friends and to train for the Governor's Cup event.

"Keep Moving" has earned the active support of Governor Dukakis, public and private organizations and business across the state, and Elder Affairs' Secretary Lanzikos. We are pleased to announce that Bay State Health Care has joined Nabisco Foods as a sponsor of this year's event."

The "Keep Moving" program for older adults is a statewide network of Walking Clubs, highlighted by the annual Governor's Cup walk and run. Designed by the Executive Office of Elder Affairs to promote fitness and socialization, "Keep Moving" was launched by Gov. Dukakis at a press conference in 1985.

For more information about the Cohasset Walking Club and the Fourth annual Governor's Cup event, call the Cohasset Council on Aging office at 383-9112. Remember anyone 40 years of older can join us on the walk Sept. 26.

State says housing is restrictive

By Jane Lane
Mariner staff

The state officially reprimanded the town this week, saying Cohasset is failing to house low and middle income families.

The threat that has hung over the town for the past four years was finally released. The state Executive Office of Communities and Development (EOCD) expressed its displeasure with the planning board's revisions to a housing policy drafted by town officials in August. As a result of the board's failure to sign the town's original draft agreement, the state has now labeled the town unreasonably restrictive.

The planning board may decide to challenge the state in the courtroom.

Along with the demeaning title, the state's action this week renders Cohasset powerless to apply for and accept any state discretionary funds. Among the discretionary grants Cohasset has eagerly anticipated is about $2 million to complete the town's sewer project.

Executive Secretary Donald Andrew said this latest action by the state "is very serious. I don't think townspeople realize just how serious this is until we can't start new projects because of lack of state money," he said. "From what I understand, the state rejected the revisions made to the agreement by the planning board. They feel the board made vague statements and took out specific actions to be taken by the town to provide low and moderate income housing here."

But planning board chairman Robert Sturdy defended the board, and said the members may consider challenging this executive order in court.

Two weeks ago, the planning board met with selectmen, housing authority and fair housing committee members to hammer out a housing policy

Hollywood nixes Cohasset for film

Depending on your viewpoint, Cohasset received some good or bad news this week. The movies will not return to our town.

The Massachusetts Film Bureau confirmed that Cohasset has been eliminated as a location for the NBC made-for-television movie, A Rockwell Christmas. Film executives, including production manager Marvin Miller are now concentrating on the North Shore community of Rockport.

Executive Secretary Donald Andrew responded to the film bureau's announcement Tuesday by saying, "I don't think you disappointed anyone here."

Since NBC and film bureau officials discussed the project with selectmen last week, there has been a flurry of protests against the project. Most of the opposition was against the original proposal to defoliate some trees around Cohasset Common. Miller told selectmen last

Sports strong for fall season

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

Let's face it, Cohasset is becoming a sports dynasty.

Look back to last fall. The football team lost only one game and was feared state-wide. The soccer team was one goal, an overtime goal at that, away from the state title. That's big.

The field hockey team lost only two games out of a 21-game schedule. It does not look as if this is going to be a flash in the pan performance either. Cohasset is fielding five strong teams this fall, most of which are getting a fair amount of local support.

The football team has just finished double sessions, nototrious for being the most laborious activity this side of bootcamp.

"The kids are working hard; they all seem to have positive attitudes," said coach Phil Pisano.

In a way it is a tough year for the football team. They are coming off a big loss; the graduation of Bob Durkin, the most heavily-decorated gridiron star Cohasset has been able to brag about since the days of walt Sweeney.

"We lost quite a few kids to graduation," said Pisano. "It is going to take some time to get the offense into high gear. Right now, the defense seems quite strong."

Cohasset's week. . .

Constitution event

Cohasset's participation in the nationwide observance of Constitution Day on Thursday, September 17 will see a schedule of public events held in honor of the Bicentennial of the signing of our nation's Constitution.

The schedule of events will be:

8:30 a.m. Flag raising at the Town flagpole on the Common. The Col. Thomas Lothrop Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, will present to the Town a large American Flag which once flew over the Nation's Capitol. There will be a brief ceremony and the flag raising will be attended by a bugler who will sound the traditional flag raising call. A delegation from the Cohasset Schools will be present.

12 Noon Dedication of the Town's newly named Constitution Park at the foot of Ripley Road. Once the site of Tilden's Livery Stables, this small park is designed to honor the nation's Constitutional Bicentennial, and will hold an appropriate marker and decorative plantings.

4 p.m. National Bell-Ringing Ceremony — the Town's churches have been invited to participate in the nationwide bell-ringing ceremony in honor of the signing of the national Constitution on this date at Philadelphia in 1787. The bell ringing will be followed by a concert played upon the 51 bell Jessie Bancroft Carillon at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church.

7:30 p.m. Arranged by the Town's Recreation Department and Bicentennial Committee, with the cooperation of the Brockton Federation of Musicians, a Band Concert will be held at the Common. In case of cold or inclement weather the concert will be presented in the High School auditorium. Music appropriate to the Bicentennial observance will be featured.

The general public is invited to attend these special events honoring the Bicentennial of the American Constitution.

Sign compromise

The zoning board of appeals currently holds the keys to a number of town question marks including the size and shape of the sign for the new super Stop&Shop.

"The board's feeling is that the proposed signs are too large and could be made a little more aesthetically pleasing."

The board continued the variance hearing until October 1 when developer Donald Staszco will try to reach a compromise with the board over the size, shape and color of the signs.

Staszco refused to comment to the Mariner about any changes that he might be considering.

"We are waiting for a more scaled back proposal," said Mark DeGiacomo of the board, "something more in keeping with Cohasset."

One of the proposed signs would read "Cohasset Plaza".

"They have represented to us that there is absolutely no intention of other stores at that sight," said board member Terrence Farrell. "I am not worried about that; it is just a marketing term, just a catchy phrase."

. . . Cohasset's week

No CHL increase

The appeals board unanimously decided that Cohasset Heights Landfill should not be allowed to expand in any direction or accept any general trash.

Litigation continues with the owners of the dump who are expected to appeal this ruling. Public concern over the possible endangering of Lily Pond, the towns water supply is very evident in Cohasset.

Engineers representing Paul Barry, owner of the landfill, were not able to convince board members that any risk would be acceptable, at the Sept. 3 meeting.

Matthews accepts

Mary J. Matthews, who was appointed last week as town accountant, has accepted the position.

Selectmen voted last week to offer the position to Matthews, who is currently an accountant for Yankee Oil and Gas Co. She will begin her employment with the town October 5 at an annual salary of $28,000.

New Vo-tech head

The regional school committee voted last week to appoint Vincent DiClemente as the new principal of the Abington campus of the South Shore Vocational Technical High Schools for a two-year term despite objections from Abington committee member Walter Easttey.

"I want to be recorded as saying I'm against it. I think its illegal," Easttey told board members.

DiClemente was recommended to the board by Superintendent Clifford Easton to replace Paul Bows who retired last spring. But Easttey said he objected to DiClemente's appointment because he had not been one of the original top three candidates interviewed by the review subcommittee.

Two of the original top three candidates have turned down the vacant principal position, leaving Votech's drafting teacher Bob Thayer as the only remaining candidate who was originally interviewed by the review subcommittee.

The school committee had voted at the last meeting to appoint Joseph Pink, a Kansas City school administrator, to the position. But Pink rejected the offer last week because he felt it would be too expensive to move to Massachusetts.

"He reviewed the economics of the situation and decided it just didn't make sense to move from Kansas City," Easton said. "It wasn't the right financial conditions."

Easton said DiClemente had been one of the original 24 candidates for the position, but had withdrawn his application after it appeared he would be the assistant director of occupational education at the new Plymouth High School. Because of his withdrawing from the position, he was not one of the 11 applicants chosen from the 24 to be interviewed.

DiClemente resubmitted his application after Plymouth voters rejected a Proposition 2 1/2 override to come up with the funding needed to open the new Plymouth High School.

Coalition seminar

The South Shore Coalition wants to inspire into action the civic leaders of its 10 member-towns.

With help from the Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC), the coalition's solid waste subcommittee is organizing a seminar for public officials.

The seminar, which will be held Oct. 24 at Norwell High School, will address solid waste legislation; current practices and proposals; disposal options; recycling and composting; procurement and the legal and financial ramifications of solid waste disposal on the South Shore.

In reviewing the regional trash disposal scenario, each representative to the subcommittee described conditions in his or her hometown.

Jeff Power of Cohasset's waste disposal committee said his community is "in the throes of trying to juggle events as they come by," and compared it to juggling chainsaws.

"We probably have three years left at our landfill, by some estimates and as many as 11 years, by others," he said. "We would like to have as much space as possible remaining."

Power noted that SEMASS, a trash to energy facility in Rochester has approached the town with a contract.

"That may or may not be a possibility," he said. "We are looking to Weymouth as a possibility because it would cut 60 miles off the trip. If we thought something might go ahead there, we might not be eager to sign up somewhere else."

Athletic field repairs at Oct. 26 town meeting

By Jane Lane
Mariner staff

Renovations to the Milliken and Lillard fields will cost at least $600,000 and could cost almost $900,000 if voters approve a range of options for the athletic field project.

Principal Ken Ekberg told the school committee this week that four articles are being prepared and will be submitted for the Oct. 26 special town meeting. The project will be presented to voters in four parts, he explained.

As committee chairman Joseph Nedrow noted, this procedure is used, "so you may get half a loaf rather than none at all."

The first article, Ekberg said, is the major consideration to be presented. The $600,000 request will be to construct a field for varsity boys and girls soccer, football, field hockey and an asphalt track, scoreboard, fencing, sod, an access road to the field, irrigation and drainage work at the Lillard Field site.

"At this stage we'll be asking for an asphalt base on the track. It won't have that special colored running surface on the top," Ekberg said, explaining that the additional covering will cost more money.

The first article will include extensive site work, relocation of the water pipe, site improvements and furnishings, electrical and drainage work.

Option number two to be presented to the town meeting will be a request for $103,000 to install an all-weather covering on the track. "It's a better surface to run on," Ekberg explained, noting that the proposed surface is a medium quality and price. He also said that by Oct. 26, the Milliken Field committee should have bids in for the project and will be able to give voters specific costs of the two proposals.

Article three, he said, will request $113,850 for the installation of new bleachers to accommodate 1,000 spectators at Lillard field. The stands would be located on the hillside facing toward the high school.

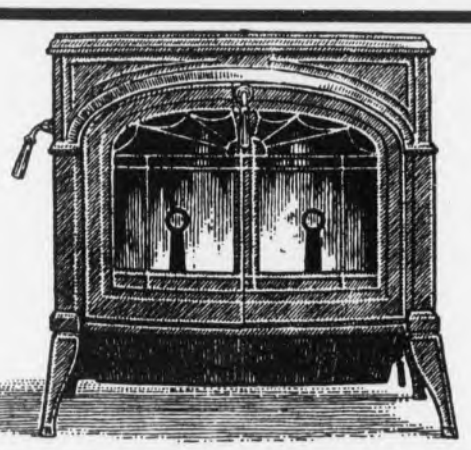
The final town meeting article will be $79,034 for the installation of lighting at the varsity field. Although the electrical conduits will be installed as part of the first major article, Ekberg said this portion will be extra.

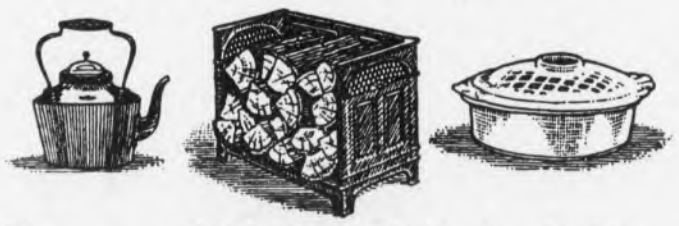
"So, even if two of the four articles don't pass town meeting, the basis will be there so it can be added later on?" committee member Diana Kornet asked. Ekberg answered affirmatively.

"All along we have wanted options, but we didn't have enough engineering money to do the bleachers and lighting estimates," he added. The Deer Hill principal and field committee member noted that the Capital Outlay Committee has not included the Milliken and Lillard field project on its prioritized list for fiscal 1988. But because the sewer project proposal will not be ready by Oct. 26, there'll be at least $100,000 more available at the special town meeting.

Ekberg also explained that all private donations will be put directly toward the renovation project. "So we probably won't have to raise all the $600,000," he added. Other options may be to use the private money to defray the cost of the project bond.

Regarding Milliken Field, the committee member said it will be used for recreational and junior varsity sports. Ekberg said the field needs to be crowned differently and the baseball diamond must be relocated. The field will be used for junior varsity soccer, football and baseball.





According to Ekberg, the architect has assured a Nov. 1 starting date, if town meeting approves the articles. Much of the work could be completed by the winter, he said, with the remaining sod, seed and asphalt work to be completed in the spring.

The school committee voted this week to submit two articles into the Oct. 26 special town meeting in which portions of school-owned property will be transferred.

School property articles . . .

Last month, developer Paul Ferrini told the committee he needed a 40-feet-by-160-feet parcel of school-controlled land in order to construct three house lots on Evergreen Lane. The school land, he said, would allow access from the house lots to Evergreen Lane rather than the heavily-traveled Rte. 3A.

Although the committee discussed the possibility of Ferrini establishing a scholarship in exchange for the land, Supt. Stephen Hart said further discussions indicated that would not be the best alternative. After conferring with the planning board and conservation commission, they recommended that the town be given a parcel with 100-feet of frontage on Rte. 3A currently owned by Ferrini.. That parcel will be added to the several acres of property under the control of the school department.

There are several issues yet to be resolved, Supt. Hart noted, including concerns expressed by abutters to the property. Some of their concerns center on the suspected contamination of Peppermint Brook by this proposed development, and the possibility that this precedent may lead other developers to access their residential construction onto Evergreen Lane. "I'm not sure we're able to respond to these concerns," he said, noting that other town boards will have to resolve any environmental issues.

School committee member Barbara Bliss suggested the article include a statement that the school department retain rights to that easement. Other members said that other town boards should review the traffic congestion created by the project and the possibility of groundwater pollution.

The committee voted to support the article, noting that it would be reworded to ensure the schools retain control over the easement.

A second article supported by the committee will transfer 1.99 acres of school-controlled land to the housing authority for the construction of a residence for mentally retarded adults.

Supt. Hart told the committee that the state Department of Mental Health has discovered buildable land at the access of Pleasant Lane. The state hopes to construct a residential facility for eight retarded adults. "This is not a unique idea," Supt. Hart said, noting that such residences have been successful in Hingham and other South Shore towns.

The land would be transferred to the housing authority who will oversee the facility.

School committee member Bliss suggested that the article specifically state that if the land does not perc, then it will revert back to control of the school department. "We should transfer the land subject to the securing of all permits for the construction of the facility," she stated.

Supt. Hart explained that before the Oct. 26 special town meeting, the housing authority should hold public meetings to discuss the proposal with residents. "They should field questions on this, not us," he said.

In other school committee action, the board voted to support 11 early release days for the Cohasset teachers this year. Although that is a greater number than last year, Supt. Hart explained there are many more new programs which teachers must discuss and coordinate among themselves. Included in the new programs this year is Cohasset's participation in the federally-sponsored Reading is Fundamental project. According to an application filed by the Deer Hill School, the program will provide three additional books to each student at the school this year.

The high school will be participating in a World of Difference program which encourages everyone to consider the value and uniqueness of all individuals. That program will need constant coordination and cooperation among teachers at the school, Supt. Hart stated.

A total of $11,287 in Horace Mann grants will be awarded to 11 teachers this year. The following teachers will participate in specialized projects as a result of the state funding: Edwin Leach, junior/senior high, special needs; Jo-Ellen Wood, junior/senior high, English; Colleen Lucas, junior/senior high, art; Susan McFadd, junior/senior high, librarian; Joseph Bouchard, junior/senior high, social studies; Frances Cronin, junior/senior high, English; Joann Magoun, Deer Hill School; Virginia Burbank, junior/senior high, English; John packard, junior/senior high, English/AV; Colleen Lucas, junior/senior high, art; and Jean O'Malley, elementary, art.

The next meeting of the school committee will be Sept. 21 at 8 p.m. at the high school.

Red Cross bloodmobile

The next Cohasset Community Red Cross Bloodmobile will be held on Tuesday, Sept. 22 - from 2:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. at the Unitarian First Parish House, 23 No. Main St. Cohasset, across from the Common.

State finds town housing restrictive . . .

agreement. Planning board members had refused to sign an agreement sent by selectmen to the state the second week in August, although members of the housing authority, fair housing committee and selectmen unanimously accepted the document prepared by selectmen and the executive secretary.

Board chairman Sturdy said this week, "We unanimously agreed that the (original) policy was a misstatement of fact. The fact is there is no zoning bylaw in this town that is responsible for the skyrocketing property values in town. The general housing market has caused the values to be what they are.

"The planning board's response is apt to be to take the state to court. We look at this whole process as illegal," he continued. "It is a finding without judicial process, because some bureaucrat says he doesn't like it. Well, that's not the American way. The planning board will likely discuss this matter, but we are not about to agree that this town is unduly restrictive and agree to correct our sins."

Executive Secretary Andrew said he received word last week from an official at EOCD, saying the planning board's revisions to the town's document were unacceptable. "The original housing agreement we sent into the state in August was acceptable to the state, but it lacked the planning board's signature. The state would not accept it without their signatures," Andrew explained. "I sent in the document anyway, hoping to expedite the matter. I knew that if the state didn't receive anything, the town would be in default.

EOCD issued a warning to town officials in July, stating that a memorandum of agreement between the state and the town must be prepared by the end of that month. As town officials progressed with the draft agreement, the state was apprised of their progress.

But the planning board notified selectmen that were opposed to the draft agreement, and after a combined meeting Aug. 26, the board submitted a revision agreement. That document was hand delivered to EOCD officials Aug. 28.

"The state told us this week. It's not going to fly," Andrew said. "The bottom line is there'll be no more discretionary money at any time. We could lose a lot of money, especially with the sewer project. Discretionary grants are open competition funding from the state to towns that apply and qualify for financial assistance regarding specific programs. Loss of discretionary funds will not affect the town's cherry sheet state revenues.

"This is very serious," he stated. "I don't think we'll realize the impact until there is something we want a grant for and the money just won't be there.

"All they want is an agreement and for the town to live up to that agreement. They don't want to force us to import low income people - they want to keep people here - to allow low and moderate income people to remain here."

According to the executive secretary, the next step will be up to the planning board. "Eventually they must sign an agreement if we are to rid ourselves of this label," he stated. "We have to work something out with them and get as close to our original agreement as possible. I foresee future meetings and communications between the planning board, the housing authority and selectmen. The planning board took out virtually every firm commitment we made in the original agreement. That's what EOCD wants from us, and the planning board was unwilling to provide it."

Planning Chairman Sturdy responded by saying that the board will continue to study the problem "very carefully. It's going to be a long winter.

"We are dealing with the situation now, but we might just say, 'let's take the state to court.' We're kind of sick of these executive mandates and administrative findings of fact that totally violate all administrative procedure. There's been quite a commitment from the planning board for some time to work on low income housing. There's this presumption on the part of the state that we have unlimited land in Cohasset. That's wrong, and what's left is extremely expensive to develop."

No movie for Cohasset

week that in order to recreate a Christmas atmosphere, they were investigating safe methods to defoliate the trees. The film was scheduled to be shot in mid to late October, which they figured would be before leaves started to fall from the trees.

But late last week, film bureau chief Mary Lou Crane said the defoliation plans were cancelled. "Our number one highest priority in the production of this film is the safety as it relates to the environment. All information we've received indicates there is no method that will be compatible with the environment. It will not be considered," she stated.

But following their Aug. 31 meeting, selectmen received many telephone calls from angered residents. Selectman Martha Gjesteby, who expressed initial concern about the proposal, received a number of calls at her home. She talked with more than 40 residents and to several merchants about the project. She also received calls from Boston Globe and New York Times reporters who wanted to write about the local controversy.

"Some people I talked to were so upset," she said. "They just don't want this town to be another stop for tour buses. One movie was fine, but now they want us to fade into the background."

As an elected officials "and custodian of this town, I consider Cohasset a special place," she added. "If it ever came down to a vote, I'd have to say no. Based on the people who've called me, I don't think another movie will serve to better this town."

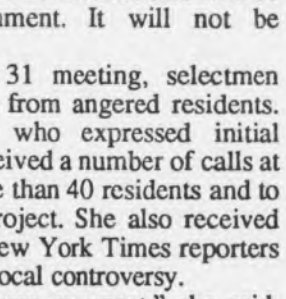
She was stopped on the street several times by residents who expressed outrage at the movie proposal. "These were people I don't know," she stated. "Our town values its beauty and uniqueness. To maintain that is the kind of thing I want to do. "

Police Chief Joseph Kealey said he would go along with whatever selectmen decided. "But if anyone touches one leaf on any tree on the Common, I'd personally arrest them," he stated.

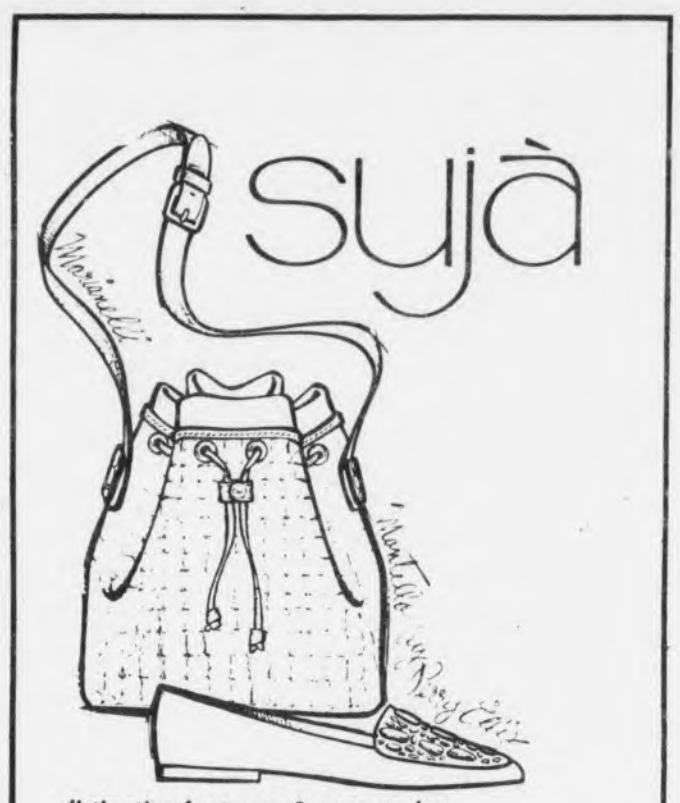
Executive Secretary Donald Andrew said that would be unnecessary. Judging from the number of calls received by the selectmen's office, "if anyone defoliated those trees, there'd be a firing squad," he said.

Chief Kealey commented that last year's work with The Witches of Eastwick crew was a burden for the overworked police officers who had several other extra duty details throughout the town. If it hadn't been for additional officers provided by the Norfolk County Sheriff's department, Chief Kealey said the Cohasset force could not have handled the traffic for the film crews.

"We also had a lot of people calling us day and night about the film," he added. "We did the best we could. It was a lot of inconvenience for people, and they let us know."



If it wasn't for the coordination and cooperation between the police, tree and park and high departments, Chief Kealey said the burden would have been unbearable. "After a while the newness wears off and it was just a lot of work," he noted.



Executive Secretary Andrew said filming in the summer was better for other town officials because that is traditionally the slowest part of the year. He had concerns that A Rockwell Christmas was scheduled for production during the height of budget and town meeting planning time.

"I was leaning toward Rockport too," he laughed. "It sounds like it will be a very nice movie and Cohasset would be the perfect setting because this town is like a Rockwell painting. And it would certainly help the business community before the Christmas season starts, because they were going to film quite a bit down in the Village. But right from the start we realized that nothing would be safe to use to defoliate the trees. I'm not disappointed this movie will be made in Rockport, and not in Cohasset."

Andrew said the office received 50 to 60 calls last week. About ninety percent of those callers were opposed to the concept of defoliation, many were against the movie being filmed here, and a small number expressed support for the return of Hollywood to Cohasset.

"We received so many letters from residents about this, we'll have to reply with a form letter," he admitted.

☐ Connie Parker had quite a story to relate this week! It seems that about seven years ago, she did a kindness for a couple, who gave her a sterling silver letter opener as a thank-you. It is a Kirk Reposse opener, and Connie always kept it with her so that she could open her mail right at the Post Office. Anyway, one day she noticed it was gone, retraced her steps, but couldn't locate it anywhere. Last week she had a brainstorm. . . she remembered going into the Pilgrim Co-Operation Bank after the Post office, and realized that there is a drain right out in front. She went across to the Highway Department and asked Harold Litchfield if it was possible to get into the drain. Harold sent two of his workers to look, and they came back with the letter opener in their hands. Needless to say, Connie is thrilled to have her opener back, and other case of living in a small town where the people really care!

☐ Two Cohasset residents have been named to the dean's list at Wheaton College, for the 1987 spring semester: They are Carla Lucas, 1989 of Cohasset, and Julie M. Hoogeveen, 1988 of Cohasset.

No encore

In a week or two, selectmen may have another tough decision to make.

If the producers of A Rockwell Christmas come back again, they will be seeking permission to film this made-for-television movie in our town. Currently, Cohasset and Rockport are under consideration by Hollywood as the central location for the NBC movie.

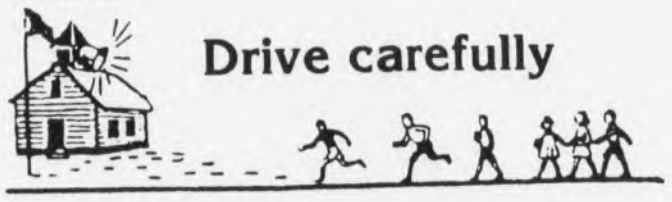
Since the production manager talked with selectmen last week, news about the possible Hollywood venture has spread through the town and into the state and national limelight.

Originally, townsfolk were concerned about the issue of defoliating trees around Cohasset Common. Production manager Marvin Miller told selectmen they were investigating safe methods to defoliate trees, to ensure a cold, Christmas-like atmosphere to the movie. But by the end of the week, film executives and officials from the Massachusetts Film Bureau assured town officials and the media that no safe method was uncovered and the defoliation proposal would be scrapped.

But for many residents, defoliation was simply the tip of the iceberg. Many people are concerned and ultimately oppose the idea of Hollywood returning to our quiet community.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby has received numerous phone calls and messages from residents, protesting the thought of an annual visit by moviemakers. "They want our town to stay unique, to remain the same," Gjesteby said about her constituents. " They don't want Cohasset to be thought of as the place where movies are made." The thought that Cohasset's typically beautiful New England village could be irreparably harmed by tour buses viewing "Hollywood East" is too much for many of us to bear.

During last year's filming of The Witches of Eastwick, townspeople had the opportunity to view firsthand how movies are made. It was an exciting way to spend a summer in Cohasset. We all have stories to tell; days we will always remember when Hollywood stars like Jack Nicholson came to Cohasset.



But we quickly recall the days when Cohasset Village was barricaded from public access. It wasn't much fun when we couldn't get into the local bank or the hardware store because "outsiders" prevented us while filming was taking place.

And then of course, some people who viewed the final product were disgusted by the result of our patience and generosity. The foul language contained in the movie turned many people off - people who vow never to allow another Hollywood film crew into this town again.

Whether Hollywood wants to return, and whether selectmen allow them, is up in the air. But the chances are, Cohasset has not heard the last from West Coast moviemakers.

One official from the Mass. Film Bureau admitted that because of the overwhelming cooperation extended last year by Cohasset to The Witches, when Hollywood now clamors for a typical New England Village, the name Cohasset comes quickly to mind.

Town officials may have to decide soon whether this is the future they desire for our community. It may have been an exciting experience last year, but perhaps it should be stopped at that. Being part of a major Hollywood film production was tolerable once, but do residents really want this episode to be repeated? We doubt it.

Referendum on nuclear waste ban

To the Editor:

Beginning Saturday, Sept. 19, signature gathering will start for a November, 1988, binding referendum question that will ban the generation of nuclear power plant waste in Massachusetts.

The referendum question will force the Pilgrim Nuclear Plant in Plymouth and Yankee Atomic in Rowe to close or convert by July 4, 1989.

Sponsor of the referendum, the Campaign To Stop Nuclear Waste, must collect 50,525 voter signatures to place the question on the ballot.

Last year, two nonbinding "test" referendum questions on the nuclear waste issue appeared on the ballot in districts near Pilgrim and Yankee. The utilities spent $500,000 in these two small districts to defeat the referenda, but the question passed in both districts by landslide margins.

Pilgrim and Yankee Atomic together, generate only approximately 5 percent of Massachusetts electric power when they are operating, but 100 percent of Massachusetts commercial high-level nuclear waste. These plants are high-level nuclear waste dumps.

Letters

Massachusetts residents have to be protected from this unwise and uneconomical production of commercial nuclear waste for which there is no safe disposal.

Join the Campaign To Stop Nuclear Waste. The local contact people are: Beth Gray, 747-5164; Janice Nickerson, 585-3133; Cheryl Nickerson, 224-3557 or Chris Newton, 585-4838. The kick-off for the signature campaign will be held at the Special Needs Rally at 11 a.m., Saturday, Sept. 19, at the middle gates of the Pilgrim Nuclear Power Station, on Rocky Hill Road in Plymouth, to collect signatures for this petition, rain or shine.

Swim team ends in second place

The Cohasset Swim Team completed its season Aug. 15, coming in a respectable second to a strong Scituate Harbor Yacht club team.

Coaches John Jackson and Eric Karcher were pleased with their team's performance and had no complaints. The S.H.Y.C., which Cohasset defeated by 150 pts. during the regular season, ran neck and neck with Cohasset in the meet but eventually opened up a 30 pt. lead to be vi torious.

The third team, K of C from Scituate, was left in the dust by the front runners to secure a third place.

The Cohasset oaches were not dissappointed to place second to S.H.Y.C. but they were content in the beating given to the K. of C. The Knights of Columbus defeated Cohasset by eight pts. just 24 hours before the finals in a meet that the coaches could only call "a mockery of a real meet." The meet, held in Scituate, "was very high strung with close races and heated exchanges of words" according to the K. of C. had no starting blocks, ropes for Karcher lane markers and a two-foot deep pool which really affected our swimmers" Jackson added.

"We knew we could beat them in a pool instead of a pond" the coaches joked. Cohassets' final record was 5-1 which included two incredible victories over Hanover and Aqua-Dux, Cohasset's notorious rivals.

"That's what we'll savor most about the season," Karcher said, "such close, fair competition, of course victory."

Although they placed second in the finals, the coaches were not entirely disappointed. "We expected to take it (the finals) but we knew Scituate had several members of the year round coastal team in Brockton. They didn't have them in the regular season meet, but there they were at the finals," Jackson said.

Amy Garden would like to thank John Jackson and Eric Karcher on behalf of all the swim team members and their parents. These young men took on the responsibility of coaching the swim team very seriously. They were able to make each member's involvement one of pride, commitment and enjoyment. While a first place was not achieved at the finals, Eric and John definitely achieved a first place in Cohasset's eyes.

Adventurers return exhausted,contented

By Al MacDonald
Special to the Mariner

At 9:45 in the morning on Friday the first of May 1987, eight people gathered in the front parking lot of Cohasset High School and drove off in two cars for Maine and then the White Mountains. These people also had some important equipment with them—eight backpacks which contained everything they would need to sustain them outdoors for the next three days some 200 miles away in an area far from civilization. As they drove away from the school and mentally went over the items in their packs, they hoped they had not forgotten anything, because hikers in the mountains that time of year could expect a wide range of conditions, from dangerous river crossings to waist-deep snow. Come 3 or 4 p.m., these people would have a chance to see if their previous weeks of pre-school prepping sessions would pay off. Everyone was excited, particularly several in the party who had never back-packed before.

"It was physically the hardest thing I've ever done, but it was a spiritual highlight of my life."

CHS hiker

Speaking as a former infantry platoon leader who specialized in patrols, I feel that backpacking is the closest peacetime counterpart I can think of to a military patrol as far as excitement, preparation, thinking skills, group dynamics, physical requirements, equipment, and awareness of terrain are concerned. The success of the mission depends on the individual success of each person—if one person gets a blister, we all suffer; if one person forgets an important item like a wool hat, we all suffer; if one person loses his psyche, we all suffer. That's why in training for a backpacking trip we take steps to avoid these problems. Backpacking is hard work. "It was physically the hardest thing I've ever done," one member said afterwards. At the same time it must be added that the same person said, "but it was a spiritual highlight of my life."

Ever since four CHS students got lost on a similar backpacking trip in the early 70s, stringent training has been a must for these trips, some 30 of which have been organized over the last 15 years. Fortunately that early incident was not a disaster, but it could have been, and it served as a warning to be more cautious in an endeavor that has been rich in educational rewards because it is at the same time so hazardous. Like Outward Bound, which focuses on the same technique, pitting oneself against nature using the experience of backpacking develops people because it is challenging.

The May, 1-2-3 trip had as its destination Mount Resolution, located near Bartlett, New Hampshire, and the Attitash ski area in the lower Montalban Ridge which culminates in Mount Washington. The crew consisted of Colleen Lucas, art teacher at CHS; Kaye Denny, who last summer bicycled across the United States; Eric Watkins, who several years ago hiked the 2100-mile Appalachian Trail; CHS seniors Stephanie Enders, Lisa Gallagher, Dan Kierce; and Andrew MacDonald and his father, the writer of this piece.

This past October, a crew including some of these same people backpacked North Moat Mountain near North Conway. This fall trip was blessed with good fortune, especialy surviving a hair-raising highway incident on the drive up just north of Boston when a pack fell off the top of one of the cars and was immediately run over. This writer will never forget the courage and devotion of his students in the car who instantly ran out into the busy highway to retrieve the items while endangering their own lives. It was a miracle no one was hurt.

At the conclusion of this fall trip various participants submitted written reflections on the experience. Some of the comments:

I had a great time. Monday morning when I came in to school I was a new person. I felt so enthusiastic about everything I did. As Ed Leonard would say, 'I was totally pumped!'

The views from the mountain were intense. The city lights, shining below as we calmly gazed at the glowing fire, the still trees standing like monuments in the morning mist, the tricky ledge protruding from the ground to give our feet a challenge, the flag raising ceremonies at the top of Moat, little rock cairns marking where we were going and where we had been....

(Dan Kierce)

I learned about the value of wool, wood, and companionship.

A bonding took place on the trip. We willingly shared our support, food, water, encouragement, knowledge, and thus, we became a family.

To be away from all the normal distractions allows interpersonal communication to foster. No TVs, radios, phones, stoves, washing machines, bathrooms, or grass to cut; all we had was time to share.

My knowledge of important things grew from the trip. I now know that the Indians used spruce sap as a gum, the taste of a teaberry leaf, the softness of pine needle (not pine bough) bedding, and the difference between stratus and cumulus clouds.

I watch my son blossom; he, for the very first time, thought, behaved, and socialized as a man.

I had clarity in my thoughts.

I appreciated the awesome beauty of nature. I want to nurture and protect it in a way I had never felt before.

I have noticed that each individual felt better about themselves because of what they accomplished....

(Ed Leonard)

An undescribable peacefulness at the peak. The weather conditions became meaningless as I was drawn inside myself.

Taking pride in myself and my body in the fact that I could physically exert myself that hard and long.

The usefulness of knowing outdoor survival techniques.

Finally, one of the most important factors is the teamwork and cooperation shared by all that made the trip worthwhile and brought out a different side in everyone.

(Eddie Leonard)

Back to this spring's trip, May 1-3, to Mount Resolution! At this point I think I will let some of the participants of this most recent trip speak for themselves also, except for my saying that toward the end of the trip I wanted an opportunity to comgratulate this crew but didn't get one. Let me now say they were strong, smart, careful: they were companionable and worked together smoothly while keeping up each personal responsibility. I am so grateful none of them incurred any injuries. I am so grateful we had this opportunity to share one of Mother Nature's best experiences.

I slept on two feet of snow at the top and enjoyed such beautiful wildflowers at the bottom! ...Being on Mt. Resolution with a fresh breeze blowing, blue skies, white billowing clouds, majestice purple mountains in every direction. ...Thank goodness for the PSO grant that supplied us with so many necessities!

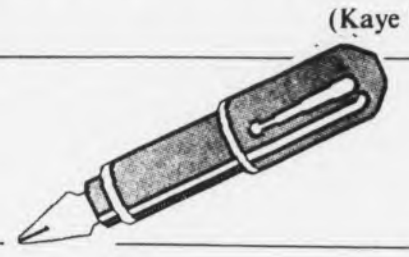
(Colleen Lucas)

As you know I had never been hiking before. I had no conception of what it would be like. And I had no idea how much I would love it. It was one of the highlights of my whole senior year! I loved every aspect of it—the fresh air, plenty of exercise, the food, the conversation, and of course the views.

If someone is physically prepared for a trip like this, I could not stress how much fun it is nor could I recommend it more highly.

Something I loved was the fact that except for the price of some equipment, all we had to pay for was gas. And it was the best vacation I had in a very long time.

...On the subject of preparedness and safety—at first I thought all those meetings were a pain and unnecessary, but when we were out there alone, we used every bit of information we learned....



Something I really liked was walking through knee-deep snow in a short sleeve shirt!

...opened up a whole new world to me.

(Lisa Gallagher)

Even though it was very hard work, I am thrilled that I went. I had always wanted to camp on the snow, and now, to say I winter camped in May!

(Kaye Denny)

When we first arrived at the base I felt really excited. I wanted to get going as soon as possible. ...After we started off, all I could think of was what was ahead. I had hiked before, but it was only day hikes. This would be two nights in the wilderness. This would be what I've wanted to do for a long time. I wasn't sure how it would be....

The fire in the morning was a welcome sight....

The summit was incredible. ...I felt great satisfaction in my achievement of conquering the mountain. I could only stare in awe as I witnessed mountains going off into the distance in every direction on this clear day.

...That night I felt really good in the knowledge that I had finished what I had set out to do.

Overall I feel the trip was a great success. Nobody complained, everybody helped each other out, everybody felt good about themselves....

(Ian Knox)

I absolutely loved the backpacking trip! I was able to slip away from all confusion, forget all my concerns and worries and simply concentrate on reaching the top!

At the top of the mountain I felt not only a great sense of accomplishment, but also a peacefulness I had never felt before. It was so wonderfully quiet, save the birds singing to each other. The view was absolutely incredible. Surrounded on all sides by beautiful, overpowering mountains, I felt as if I were in another world.

I didn't have a camera, but I took a picture with my mind. I will remember that sight and this trip forever.

(Stephanie Enders)

Steadily the figure moves through the snow-covered path. His heavy feet are engulfed by the fluffy white layers every step of the way. Still, he manages to step on, unswervingly, following the footprints that lie before him. Brushing aside an outstretched limb, he forces his way through a narrow inlet into a plethora of trees. His crouching silhouette sneaks through the twisting path. The trees and shrubs absorb his view, and his center of attention is on the pair of footprints that have found residence in the snow. His only endeavor is to catch up with the creature that made them.

All is silent, except for an occasional gust of cool wind that licks his burning countenance. His heart beats madly, and he must stop to take a rest. As he slowly raises his head, he catches the glimpse of a blue pack moving swiftly through the trees.

At last! He is so close! With a rush of adrenaline and a sorry grunt he wrenches himself free of the snow and begins his insane march onward. His bulking pack clings to his aching shoulders with an unrelentless grip. Nevertheless, he trudges merrily on.

His burdensome steps soon break out into a hasty jog. He must catch up. All of a sudden there is a break in the trees, and the clear skies reach down and pull his spirit forward. A few more steps and he will be at the peak. His soaking feet converse with the open ledge, and his outstretched hands grab hold of the little pine trees. Suddenly it all comes into view. His eyes fall on the large cairn that marks the goal of his voyage. And there he is, the origin of the footprints. Eric Watkins sits next to his gleaming blue pack, content.

Lamaze classes

A three week refresher course to prepare couples for childbirth utilizing the Lamaze method is being offered in Scituate.

This class will be led by a Registered Nurse, fully certified by the American Society for Psychoprophylaxis in Obstetrics (ASPO), with labor room experience. The course will provide a properly structured update for couples who had a complete childbirth class with a previous pregnancy.

Labor and the birth process will be reviewed, as will modern and proven tools and techniques used during labor including conscious relaxation, visual concentration, breathing techniques, and activities for the birth support partner. The sessions will also cover the period after the baby is born and the preparation of older brothers and sisters for the new sibling.

The next class will begin on Sept. 8. For more information or to register for the class, please contact Rebecca Fay, RN, ACCE, at 545-9152.

New CCC Class

Registration for all fall classes at the Cohasset Community Center started Tuesday, Sept. 8 and continues through the month.

Most classes will start the week of October 5 unless stated otherwise in the brochure. If you did not receive a catalogue, please call 383-0088 and arrange for one to be sent. We will also be offering a weight control and exercise program which did not get printed in our schedule of classes for this year.

Weight control class

The Cohasset Community Center is offering a new weight control and exercise program starting Tuesday, Oct. 6 from 7-8:30 p.m. If you are one of the millions of Americans who are constantly battling a weight problem, you know that diets don't work. The key to successful long-term weight control is developing new eating habits and increasing physical activity. You don't have to feel deprived to lose weight! Each class includes 45 minutes of exercise. Participants should wear exercise clothing and sneakers. Class is limited to 15.

Patricia Messing holds a Master of Science degree in Nutrition from Columbia University and has additional training in exercise physiology, aerobics and behavior modification. She has recently moved to Cohasset from Syracuse, N.Y., where she maintained a private practice in nutrition consulting.

Call 383-0088 for information about registration.

Back to School Safety tips

Children in Cohasset return to school this week, and Chief of Police Joseph Kealey and Safety Officer Cliff Jones join AAA Massachusetts in urging motorists to drive extra carefully.

"Many children in kindergarten and first grade will be coping with traffic on their own for the first time," said Safety Officer Jones. "They may not be aware of pedestrian safety rules."

Safety Officer Jones had some advice for concerned motorists. "Safe driving is a year-round responsibility, but it's even more important as schools open," he said. "Keep alert and always obey the posted speed limit, but especially in school zones. That will make it easier to come to a quick, safe stop if a child darts into your path."

As part of its annual "School's Open" safety campaign, AAA Massachusetts and the Cohasset Police Department are distributing free "School's Open — Drive Carefully" bumper stickers.

Republican Club

The South Shore Republican Club will open its fall season Monday, Sept. 21, at its new meeting place, the Norwell Grange Hall on Route 123 at South Street, near Stone House Gardens.

The speaker will be Norwell Safety Officer Harry Bates at 1 p.m. following the regular meeting at 12:30 p.m. Hostesses for the noon light luncheon will be members from Duxbury, Marshfield and Norwell.

The board will meet at 11:30 a.m. with President Ruth Hall of Scituate presiding.

LWV Meeting on Pipeline

Thursday, Sept. 17, the Cohasset League of Women Voters is sponsoring a meeting on a very timely topic —the proposed sewage pipeline off Hull. David Kellem, president of SAVE OUR BEACHES, will be the guest speaker. SAVE OUR BEACHES has gathered some startling facts:

1. MWRA is considering placement of sewage outfall pipe only 2.5 miles off Nantasket Beach.

2. PARTIALLY TREATED sewage of 43 Greater Boston Communities will be deposited through the outfall. The pipe will be about the width of the Callahan Tunnel and dump 500 Million gallons of waste everyday.

3. Other sites are considered but authorities indicate Hull is preferred location.

The Cohasset League of Women Voters urges you to attend this meeting, for the good of our town and beaches. Our coastline is one of our most valuable assets — let's try to protect it.

The meeting is scheduled to begin at 7 p.m. at the First Parish on Main Street. Refreshments will be served. For more information contact Debbie Cook at 383-6313 or Madeline Olney at 383-1492.

AAUW dinner

The American Association of University Women will hold its annual pot luck dinner Tuesday, Sept. 15, to introduce prospective members to the organization.

A social hour from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m. will precede a covered dish supper. There will be a short informative program to introduce the local program for the coming year.

For location and reservations, call the membership chairman at 749-6274.

AAUW is a national organization with a membership of more than 190,000 college graduates. The local branch serves most of the South Shore from Braintree/Quincy to Duxbury.

AAUW gives members the opportunity to strengthen their personal and professional skills, utilize and enhance their talents, discuss and act on issues of concern, foster positive change in the community, and enjoy the stimulating friendships with other graduates.

Areas of interest have historically been education, international relations, women's issues, and community concerns.

This past year the branch sponsored a career fair for children and held monthly meetings on success skills, career decisions, nutrition, women in education, and the status of women in the Soviet Union. The branch also offers cultural interests, book discussion, Spanish conversation and a gourmet group.

AAUW is open to all graduates of an accredited college and university.

CORN FESTIVAL

South Shore Natural Science Center will hold its annual Corn Festival Saturday, Sept. 19 from 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Held at the Natural Science Center on Jacobs Lane in Norwell, the festival is a South Shore tradition, enjoyed by hundreds of residents and visitors from all over New England.

Emily Powers, co-ordinator of the Festival, notes that "the Corn Festival is a dual celebration—on one hand a traditional fall harvest festival and on the other an opportunity to explore and experience cultural history. It is also a treat for the senses, a chance to enjoy the sights, smells, tastes, feel and sounds of fall."

Among the activities planned are demonstrations of such colonial crafts as blacksmithing, quilting, cider making, spinning, chair making, bird carving and flint knapping, just to name a few.

Visitors will also have an opportunity to purchase colonial, nature and harvest crafts made by some of the area's finest artisans. The color and spirit of summer can be enjoyed all winter with a bounty of dried wild and everlasting flowers grown, collected and arranged by Science Center volunteers.

Learn more about the Native American harvest celebration. Chief One Bear and friends will speak about Native American culture and customs, demonstrate traditional dance in regalia, and answer questions.

Musical entertainment for the Festival will be provided by the Green Mountain Volunteers, five accomplished performers who bring to life the folk music and dance traditions of New England. Come and join in the singing and dancing or just enjoy the music!

Making a return appearance this year is Irish storyteller Rory O'Donohue who has travelled from the year 1847 with tales of sea monsters and high adventure.

This year's Agricultural Fair promises to be even bigger and better as amateur gardeners of all ages compete for awards and prizes! Entry categories are: vegetables ($10 gift certificate prize); vegetable basket ($10 gift certificate prize); flower arrangement ($10 gift certificate prize each for adult and child classes); biggest sunflower ($5 gift certificate prize); biggest pumpkin ($5 gift certificate prize); jams, jellies and canned goods, fruits, herbs, flowers ($10 gift certificate prize); roses. For details on entering and specifics about the categories, call the Center at 659-2559.

Throughout the day there will be numerous other activities, including guided nature walks led by Barbara Devine and farm animal exhibits by area 4H groups. And be sure to take an old-fashioned horse-drawn hayride!

Refreshments will be available at the Fruit Basket, offering fresh fruit and cider, and at the Kernel's Snack Bar, serving corn chowder, corn-on-the-cob and corn-fed frankfurters at the Kernel's Sanck Bar. The Farm Kitchen will be loaded with scrumptious home-baked goodies.

Be sure and take a chance on the Corn Festival raffle. Prizes include a fall foliage weekend in New Hampshire or a cord of wood.

Complete the day at the Corn Festival by partaking in a traditional New England Bean Hole dinner, accompanied by the music of the Green Mountain Volunteers. Baked for hours in a pit of hot stone and wood ash, bean hole beans become a gourmet delight. Savor this tasty dish with ham, coleslaw, corn-on-the-cob, brown bread, dessert and beverage. The dinner tickets price is $5 for adults and $3 for children under age 10. There are limited seats and pre-purchased tickets are required. There will be one sitting, held at the close of the festival. Obtain tickets at the Center or mail a check with name, address and phone number.

The Corn Festival is funded in part by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities.

For further information about the Festival, call 659-2559. Admission for the Festival is $1.50 for adults; 75¢ for children under 14 years and free for children under 3 years.

This could be a big year for CHS sports

The defense has six returning starters including senior co-captains Adam Whitman, Glenn Froio, Matt Maloney and Ron Massa. The co-captains, along with certain other team members, will be playing both offense and defense which is a spartan task even for the toughest of high school athletes.

"We are smaller compared to most of the other teams," said Pisano. "We are concentrating on team speed and deception. They are both very key to our offense."

The season opener is Saturday morning, Sept. 19 against East Boston in Cohasset. This is a new opponent for the Skippers this year, an opponent that just happened to win the Division 5 superbowl this past season.

"It's going to be a big test," said Pisano who last year guided the team to nine victories amidst only one defeat. The early starting time for the first game 10:30 a.m. is designed partly to get people out to the game.

"It doesn't cut into someones whole Saturday if we play in the morning," Pisano said. "We'd like to get as many people out to the games as possible."

"The kids are looking at this year as a challenge," said Pisano. "They want to continue the winning tradition that we have established over the last three years. They are very committed."

Peter Sandblom will be at the helm of the team once again this year.

"He has handled the team quite well this year," said Pisano. "He is a more than adequate short passer and he can air the ball out for a long one now and then as well. We are going to try and pass more this year. We want to open up the offense a bit.The name of the game is still what you have up front, referring to his line, staffed with Glenn Froio and Adam Whitman.

"I'm pleased and I'm satisfied," said Pisano, "everyone has improved since the beginning of practice.
Our motto this year is progress through daily improvement."

Field hockey

"We look real good this year," said Claire Brady the fearless leader of the Field Hockey team.

Eleven seniors will be returning to staff this Skipper team that only lost two games out of a 21-game schedule last season. Forwards returning include Sarah Bishop and Kerry Cullinane; who are both praised highly by Brady. Cindy Spooner, who achieved recognition as a Patriot Ledger all star last season, will be returning to her wing position.

Candi Jones will most likley be assuming duties in the net with Jen Plante helping out as well.

"The defense will be strong," said Brady. "Debbie Hartley hits the ball as hard as anyone I have ever seen."

Colbe Mantz and Heather St. Onge will joing Hartley in the midfield area.

A new development in Field Hockey this year is the new rule which allows a goal to be scored from anywhere on the field.

"It used to be that you could only score from inside the 16 yard circle that encases the net," said Brady. "We scored a lot of goals from outside the circle last year that were called back. This could definitely help us. The rule was designed to promote more scoring and we want to try and open our game up."

Over 50 young women are competing for the 17 or 18 spots on the varsity team, 26 of whom are juniors and seniors.

"We have quite a field to pick from," said Brady. "In practice this past week we have been working on specialty areas such as corners and stickwork," said Brady. "We have quite a few specialists in different areas. The team passing is also coming along very well."

Julie Bowdoin and Michele Casolaro were sighted by Brady for the offensive prowess in the link position.

"We are going to start getting into the real stuff in practice in the upcoming week," said Brady.

The season opener is against Middelboro on Sept.17, after school in the field in front of the High School. Some well-deserved crowd support might be all these girls need to capture the state championship.

Soccer

The score was 2-2 late last Fall in the final game of the state soccer championship when the soccer season came to an abrupt halt in overtime play. This is certainly a tough bill to follow but if any team can do it, a safe bet would be that it will be this one.

"We don't want to peak too early," said Coach Dan Magner. Last year we didn't really start to make things happen until the playoffs."

An amazing 10 of 11 starters will be returning to this year's well-seasoned skipper team.

John Reidy, the only player lost to graduation, is now on the starting team at Catholic University in Washington D.C. The Reidys will still be represented on this year's team by twin brothers Joel, who will be minding the goal, and Jim, a forward.

"We are still working with basics all the time," said Magner. "It is the biggest part of the game. Once you have the basics the other things are going to come."

Ten returning starters is a big advantage for Magner.

"The kids feel comfortable with each other; that is very important.They know what I expect of them; it saves me rehashing a lot of points."

The senior co-captians of the 1987 Skipppers are Todd Fitzpatrick, Jason Marsac and last years high scorer, Ian Smart. The skippers have emerged victorious from three casual scrimmages against Don Bosco, Marblehead and Natick.

"We've done really well," said Magna. "The passing has been outstanding for this early in the season."

Magna sighted Travis Coley, Matt Began and Brian Pompeo as some of the younger players who are showing potential.

"It is so nice to have younger guys who can step in and play without a drop in the skill level," said Magna.

The first league game is on Tuesday Sept. 15 away against Hull.

"We had about 40 people out to see us play last Saturday; it is really nice to see that kind of a turnout," said Magna.

"Defense gets you further than a potent offense," explained Magna.

Steve Myers, Jim Gallagher, Danny Pompeo and Adam Durant will all be taking care of that in the midfield.

"This year we are going to try and prepare specifically for teams. We will use the basics as always but we will try to adjust to other teams styles," explained Magna. "The big thing is the team aspect, we want to see that through all the way."

"Winning the state title is one of our goals," said Magna. "First we want to win the division and then the Eastern Mass. championship. They are all within our grasp," said Magna.

The girls Soccer team might not be coming off such an impressive record of victory but their spirits are just as high.

"The Kids have been coming along real fast, " said Coach Kennan Startzell. "The kids are getting better skilled as they get older. I am starting to work on team play, strategies and passing much earlier than I have been able to in the past."

Jen Coley and Liz O'Leary are in the goal scoring positions for the skippers and, for her third year of varsity action, Nancy Riley will be in the net.

"It is a young team," said Startzell. "I have been pleasently surprised."

Two of the Skippers veteran midfielders, Margie Murphy and Kerri Kirkendall, were injured this summer and will not see action early in the season.

"They are both big losses," said Startzell. "They are both outstanding players and it will be tough to fill their shoes. We just don't have the depth of a lot of other teams."

Startzell looks to midfield as the teams' strongpoint. Katie Lord and Katie Murphy both have a stronghold on the midfield positions.

"Vicky Kelly has been doing very well as a stopper," said Startzell. "Already Cindy Dormer is one of the strongest sweepers I have coached in five years."

According to Startzell, the girls team looks as if it might surprise quite a few opponents this year.

Fall recreation registration

The Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct fall registrations on Saturday morning, Sept. 12, from 9 a.m. to 10:30 a.m., Town Hall.

Recreation Soccer is designed for girl's and boy's Kindergarten through 9th grade. Grades K, 1 and 2 will meet at the Osgood School for clinics and grades 3 thru 9 will be playing "in house" league games, all beginning on Saturday, Sept. 26. The fee will be $10 per child, with 50% discounts offered for subsequent children from the same family. Also you will need a check made payable to "Goodwin Graphics" for $4.50 (grades 3 through 9) only, for team shirts.

Kindergarten clinics will meet at Osgood School from 9-10 a.m., beginning Saturday, Sept. 26, 1st and 2nd grade clinics will also begin that day, from 10-11 a.m., at Osgood School. K-2 will not need team shirts but should come dressed appropriately for soccer, as weather dictates.

The Soccer Booster's club will be selling tickets, ($3 each, pre-schooler's free of charge), at the soccer registration on Saturday, Sept. 12, for their annual Pancake Breakfast, which will be held at Deer Hill School, Sunday, Sept. 20 from 9 a.m. to noon. Tickets for the breakfast may also be purchased at the door on the 20th.

Late registration will be accepted on Monday and Tuesday, Sept. 14, and 15, from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m. only, at the Recreation office.

Teams for grades 3 through 9 will be 6 on 6 this year. We are making every effort this year to restructure the soccer league with the intent of providing and executing the following:

A. Reduce age/grade groupings to no more than 2 years difference for all teams.

B. Girls and boys will have separate teams wherever possible.

C. All teams, (grades 3-9) will play all games, 6 on 6.

D. Junior Varsity players will be allowed to register this season.

Officials go to bat for diabetic firefighter

By Jane Lane
Mariner staff

Town officials are supporting a local fireman's fight to remain in the department.

Last month, the state Department of Personnel Administration ruled that Firefighter/EMT William Sestito should not be named to a permanent position because he has diabetes. The department backed a previous decision by Civil Service that Sestito's appointment should not be approved.

The 21 year-old Hill Street resident was appointed to the department May 18. He had been a member of the department's call force for two and a-half years prior to his permanent appointment.

When Sestito went before the Department of Personnel Administration's Medical Occupational Review Panel, he was ruled medically unable to perform the duties of EMT/Fireighter. He is appealing that decision to the Civil Service Commission, but has not yet heard anything from the state.

Sestito, who is trying to overturn that decision, said his first "run" as an EMT assigned to the Cohasset ambulance in May was to aid a Scituate resident who

Tuesday morning crash kills young woman

Police are investigating a single-car crash that killed a 19 year-old Stockbridge Street woman early Tuesday morning.

Christine Burke, 19, a lifelong resident of Cohasset, was killed when the 1987 Honda Civic she was driving crashed into a tree in front of 183 South Main Street. It took firefighters 30 minutes to extricate Burke from the vehicle which was pinned against a tree on the driver's side. The upper portion of her body was lodged between the dashboard and the passenger's door.

She was pronounced dead from massive injuries at South Shore Hospital at 2:32 Tuesday morning.

Police responded to a call at 1 a.m. Tuesday. According to Officer John Conte, the first to arrive at the scene, the car driven by Burke was apparently traveling north on South Main Street when it crossed the yellow line in the road and struck a tree. The car was traveling over an incline in the road when it crossed into the opposite lane. Officer Conte estimated the car was traveling between 50 and 60 m.p.h. when it slammed into the tree. The posted speed there is 30 m.p.h., he said.

Burke was alone in the car at the time of the accident. "We're trying to determine why the car crossed over into the wrong lane," he stated.

Burke was a lifelong resident of Cohasset and attended Cohasset public schools. Her guidance counselor at Cohasset High School, Mary Babaian, recalled Burke as "a lovely young lady. She was quiet and polite - a real lady."

The counselor said Burke held various outside jobs during her years at the high school. She was, Babaian said, "real quiet, but very well liked by her circle of friends. She was ever so pleasant.

"Christine was always immaculately groomed," she remembered. " She did everything with class. She always looked her best. She was very respectful, as were her brothers and sisters."

Following the Tuesday morning tragedy, Babaian said, "we feel devastated to lose another of our students, especially one who was as nice as Christine."

For the past year, Burke was employed as a receptionist at Reflections Hair Salon on Elm Street and at Reflections Tanning Salon on Rte. 3A. Owner Dan

METCO leader to be role model

She is the "doctor, the lawyer and the Indian chief." But to Patricia Brown, Cohasset's new METCO coordinator, her most important function is as a role model for all the students.

"My job," she explained, "is to coordinate the METCO program. I see myself as an advocate for the students - working with parents and teachers to gain a quality education for these students.

"I see myself as a role model," the South End resident continued. "I am here not just for the METCO students. If I can be of assistance to any student, I would like to provide it."

METCO is the state-operated program in which inner city students are bused into suburban school systems each day. This is the 26th year of the program, and Cohasset has been involved since its inception.

Brown began her duties last week in her second floor office at the high school. Her immediate assignment is to coordinate class scheduling and transportation, and to work out any problems that arise the first days of school.

METCO and Cohasset are like old friends, having shared 26 years together. Although Cohasset is one of the smallest communities involved in the program, with a total of 580 students in the system, their ratio of METCO students is relatively high, Brown stated. This year, METCO will sponsor a total of 48 students, including three first graders and 26 members of the junior/senior student body. "We plan to keep that number the same," she explained. "It's a manageable size, a workable number."

In addition to assisting the students with their class scheduling, Brown is a "displinarian, a doctor, a lawyer and an Indian chief. I wear a lot of hats in this job," she stated. "I need to do whatever is needed of me. I'm prepared for the challenge - that's what I find rewarding."

This is the first METCO position Brown has ever held. Her only previous experience with the program has been a personal involvment. Her two children, Kanika, 10, and Jeffrey, 6, are METCO students in Sudbury. This is Jeffrey's first year in the program.

"I liked the concept of the program - that my children were being exposed to the outside world. And liked the idea that I would be an adult role model for other children," she stated. Brown is a former career counselor at Bunker Hill Community College and taught for two years in the Boston public schools. After being cut by Prop. 2 1/2 budget reductions, Brown was named director of youth services at the Aswalos House in Roxbury. The community center was named by a participant in a contest - it means "all sisters with a lot of soul."

She was pleased with reception she received during her interview with the former METCO coordinator in Cohasset, Supt. Stephen Hart, and high school principal Mary Ellen Gallagher. "As soon as I walked into the superintendent's office, I knew I liked their philosophy. There's s sign in his office which states, 'Cohasset's

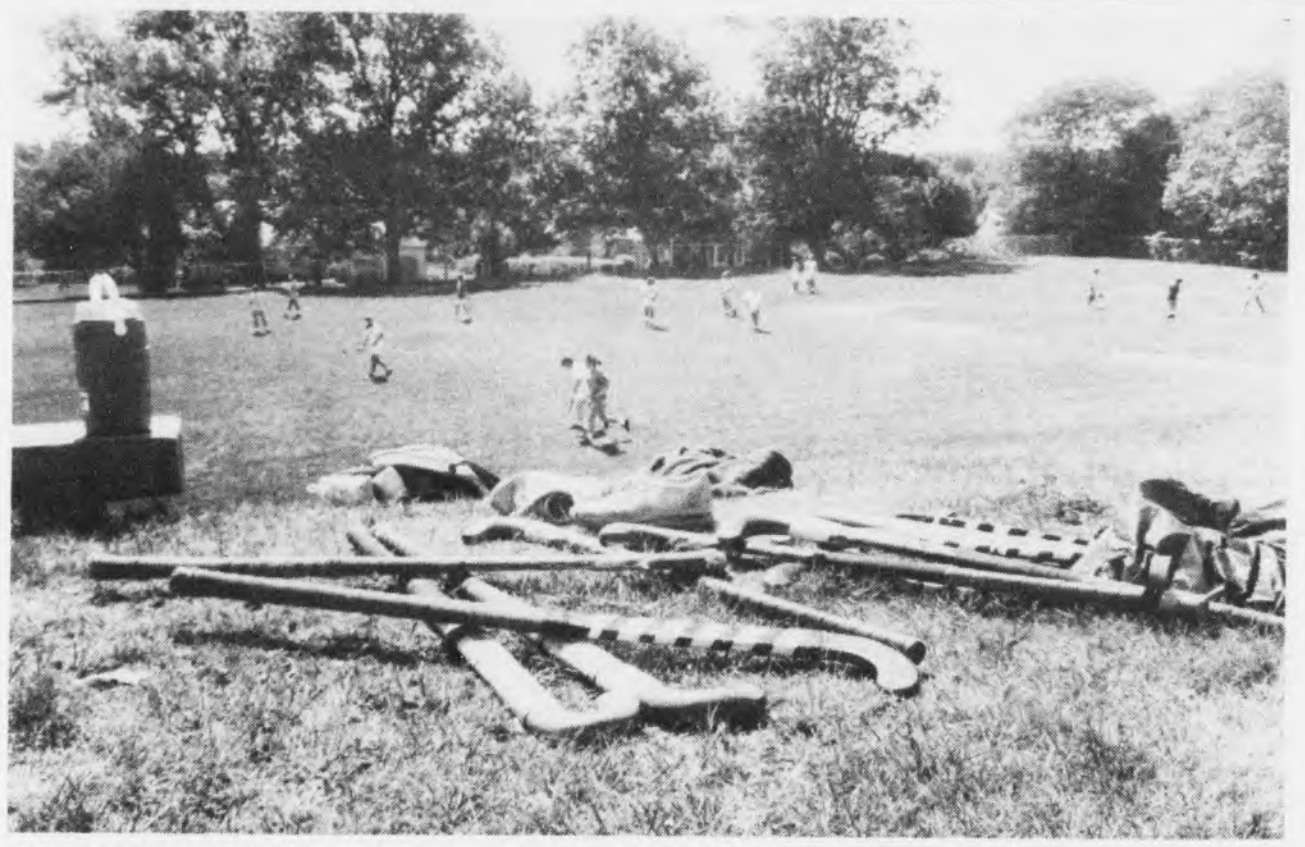
School bus violators

With students across the Bay State returning to classes, Registry of Motor Vehicles inspectors are boarding school buses and patrolling bus routes. That action is part of a safety offensive designed to crack down on drivers illegally passing school buses, according to Registrar Robert M. Hutchinson, Jr.

The program was created to prevent off-bus pupil injuries and deaths, while raising driver awareness of the rules when approaching school buses.

"While measurable improvements were noted last year, impatient motorists continue to present untenable risks to school children," said Hutchinson.



The program was created to prevent off-bus pupil injuries and deaths, while raising driver awareness of the rules when approaching school buses.

"While measurable improvements were noted last year, impatient motorists continue to present untenable risks to school children," said Hutchinson. "We intend to send a clear message to drivers: If you're going to ignore red lights flashing on stopped school buses, and attempt to scoot by, there's a good possibility you're going to get caught." And, penalties for getting caught are heavy, as conviction means a minimum fine of $100, with a graduated scale up to $1,000 and possible loss of license for subsequent offenses.

Massachusetts law requires that drivers approaching stopped school buses with red lights flashing, stop before reaching the bus. The only exceptions are when a school bus stops on the opposite side of a divided highway or when a police officer waves a motorist by.

When a Registry officer riding a bus spots a vehicle illegally passing, he records the plate number and later contacts the owner, requesting information about the operator at the time of the offense. When the agency receives the information from the owner, the operator is issued a citation.

If the Registry's letter of inquiry is ignored, the owner of the car is notified that he has been scheduled for a license suspension hearing.

No appeal decision

Selectmen sent a lot of local fishermen home disapointed on Monday night. A throng of about forty boat owners, mostly local fishermen arrived at Monday night's meeting to try and persuade selectmen not to appeal a decision handed down by a Superior Court Justice. The ruling said that the efforts by the harbormaster and the town to prevent William Figueiredo from placing floats for 37 boats in Bailey's Creek were, "so totaly misplaced as to be capricious."

Selectmen adjourned to executive session at Mondays meeting to discuss the possibility of appealing the case.

After a 45 minute closed session Chairman Rocky Laugelle announced to the anxious crowd, "There will be no discussion on this issue. We have agreed that the two attorneys will meet to discuss this case further. As for now, the case is in litigation and we have been advised by our attorney not to discuss it."

The town has thirty days to appeal. Until this issue is settled Figueiredo cannot put his dock in the water.

Reserve transfers

Selectmen approved close to $11,000 in reserve fund transfers at their meeting on Monday night. $9,500 was approved for work on the design phase to cover the total cost of $14,000 needed for completion of plans for the proposed transfer station. $570 was approved for repair of the town clock done in timely fashion by timepeice impresario Noel Ripley. $750 was approved for the patching and resetting of stones in additional work now being completed in the harbor. A request of $1177 by the tree and park department was tabled. The money is for repair of a fence damaged in a vandalism related incident. Police apparently have suspects but no conclusive proof.

Kickoff fund raiser

Sept. 27 is the date for State Representative Mary Jeanette Murray's annual fund raiser Brunch. The event will take place at the South Shore Country Club from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.

Honors that Rep. Murray has had bestowed upon her are: Sons of Italy Citizen of the Year award, the First Woman to be Elected as President of the Massachusetts Legislators' Association, Distinguished Citizen Award by the Boy Scouts of America, and Chairman of the Womens' Legislators' Caucus. Mary Jeannette is also a Veteran of the United States Marine Corps.

Rep. Murray refuses to be dictated to or controlled by special interest groups and her voting records reveal she supports the will of the majority of the people.

Tickets are available by contacting Lillian Murray - Chairman at 383-1000. Treasurer for The Re-election Committee for Mary Jeannette Murray is R. G. Buckley, who can be reached at 383-0304.

Oct. 26 warrant

Selectmen finalized the items for the Oct. 26 special town meeting. Some items were cut and will appear in the spring at the regular town meeting. The Miliken field warrant was the most noticeable item cut from Town Meeting.

"I'd rather see a big money item like this appear at the regular Town meeting,"said Selectman Cliff Mitman.

"This meeting was called for a specific reason," said selectman Burt Pratt referring to the superfluous nature of many of the items.

The big warrants on the October ag da will include a bill to make King Street a one way traffic route. Three bills concerning SEMASS construction will be on the docket as well as a board of health item concerning the Cohasset Heights Landfill. A 3-2 vote will allow the bill for the close to 1 million dollar renovation for the police-fire department to narrowley find its way on to the October agenda. A $47,000 item, concerning a complete testing of Cohasset water also made it on to the agenda.

A full list of all warrants for the Oct. 26 meeting will be available soon at the town hall.

Teachers turn into students on release day

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

If you were wondering what the teachers do on release days at Cohasset High School the answer is simple. They turn into students.

Mary Ellen Gallagher, who is now beginning her second year as principal at Cohasset High has started a program in sensitivity training for teachers called; A World of Difference.

"There are certain words that teachers may be using that might be misinterpreted or mistaken by the students," said Gallagher. It is possible that in some instances we hold higher expectations for say a white student over a black student. Hopefully we don't. Subconscious messages can be transmitted. It is time to examine this."

The World of Difference program will take place on five release days during the first half of the school year. Teachers have researched and recommended the speakers who will speak on a variety of subjects.

"Something like this has to be well-planned," said Gallagher, "People on our staff have already seen these people in action."

The first mini course is in sensitivity training. It is sponsored by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. The following seminar will be a course in equity. It will be made possible through grants from Commonwealth Inservice Institute and led by Robert Winfield. The third seminar will be a lesson in student motivation and will be led by the very charismatic prncipal of the Peabody School, Ron Walker.

Dr. Jessica Daniels, a psychologist from Children's hospital in Boston, will lead a seminar entitled; Maximizing Academic Success in Children. This course will zero in on the psychological and emotional implications of teaching Afro-American children.

The final course in the series, Teaching About Africa, will be aimed at the Social Studies Department. It will be taught by Dr. Jacob H. Carruthers, Director of the Center for Inner City Studies from Northeastern Illinois University.

Gallager stressed the importance of being able to motivate students.

"Motivation comes from within," she stated, "Our job is to do what we can to foster this. There really are so many things that we can do but we just don't take time out to do them."

Gallagher explained that CHS is, "surprisingly more heterogeneous" than one might think.

"Having grades 8 through 12 in many of the same classes can make a tremendous difference," said Gallagher. "We need to be more aware of what is out there. We have to look at our curriculum and integrate more appropriate measures."

In the past, teachers have participated in programs on release days that have dealt with controversial issues including teenage suicide, managing stress and drug use. A program like A World of Difference, however, has never been offered for teachers in area schools.

Gallagher explained that in the past teachers have spent release days working on "nuts and bolts stuff" like inventory and budget requests. "This takes a surprising amount of time," admitted Gallagher. "It is important to gain sensitivity though, we have to become more aware of each other as individuals. In doing this we can better help the youngsters learn."

"It is also key," explained Gallagher, "to have a recognition of the biological process as well as socialization and motivation."

Aside from, A world of Difference programs, Gallagher has quite a line up of educational activities planned for her staff.

"Right now about half of our staff are computer literate," said Gallagher "We plan on having the whole staff learn to use of the machines and the software. Our goal is to have any staff member be able to teach any of the kids. This is a realistic expectation. It would be outstanding for any school."

Gallagher also has a AIDS workshop planned with health coodinator Mike Gill.

"We are not going to concentrate on the aspect of how the disease is contracted but instead we will concentrate more on what to do if a student or a colleague contracts it," explained Gallagher. "We are going to look into the legal responsibilities as well emotional and social impact. We need time to think before anything might happen. It is important to educate the staff. Maybe we will continue it with the students."

According to the METCO director, explained Gallagher some of the students in the program have felt prejudice.

"We have to address this," said Gallagher, "We need to look at the way we speak and the way we address each other."

That is the goal of A World of Difference, raising the level of sensitivity at Cohasset High School.

most precious resources are its children.' And there's a photo of some students.

"It's so important to cultivate that resource. Cohasset has been involved since the inception of METCO, and it was clear to me they are commited to this program."

The concept of integration is important to Brown, who said children must learn quickly that "the worlds is not all white or all black. They learn to see people on different levels, and to make new friends. It's not just something they read about, but they are getting to know each other on a personal level," she said.

The coordinator continued, "METCO provides the opportunity to kids who may not have had such opportunities at home. "

She quickly noted that her children are also involved in afterschool activities within their own neighborhood. So they will not lose that appreciation of their environment, Brown said they must remain involved with their hometown. "There are treasures to be found in each community," she said.

"I drive down to Cohasset each morning along Rte. 3A and it's so relaxing for me. It's so beautiful - the ocean and the boats. I see joggers and sailers and I can't help but think how beautiful this area is.

"But there are different treasures to be found in my own backyard," she continued. "In Boston we are only minutes away from wonderful cultural events. We can go to a museum or the theatre or to an art exhibit and it's practically nextdoor.

"I love the beauty of Cohasset, but I love going home each day to Boston," she said.

Unlike other METCO communities, Brown stated, Cohasset was fortunate enough to find a local bus contractor to provide the transportation in and out of Boston. Because the contract is not astronomical as in other area communities, the state will reimburse Cohasset.

This community also has a strong network of host families - where METCO students stay if they are forced by extracurricular activities or sports to stay late afterschool.

Brown said she will make few changes to the program this year. "I feel the need to assess the program right now and see what exactly is going on. It's not a good idea to come and start changing things. If it doesn't need to be fixed, leave it alone," she stated, noting that she would like to schedule future field trips to cultural sites in Boston for all CHS students.

Originally from New York City, Brown received her undergraduate degree from Utica College and her master's degree in human services administration from Lesley College.

For Brown, it was a big decision to allow her children to participate in the program. "But the deciding factor was that I thought they'd receive a quality education through this program," she explained. "Older kids are more apprehensive than the first graders, so it was easier to start them off early. They go through an adjustment period, but it has been a positive experience for them. That's the reason I wanted to get involved with METCO. It's been enriching for my children, and I like the concept. Thus far, it has been a wonderful experience for my children and myself."

Officials support firefighter

was experiencing a diabetic insulin reaction. "I knew just what to do," he said.

Fire Chief Daniel Brock agreed, noting that Sestito's medical experiences have helped him in his performance as an emergency medical technician and firefighter. "I wouldn't say his medical condition has been an impairment to this department. I'm not a doctor, but there have been no problems whatsoever with his diabetes. In fact, it has been a benefit to his performance," the chief stated.

Chief Brock said that although selectmen knew of the medical condition, it could not be used to disqualify him as a candidate for appointment. Under Civil Service regulations, a candidate applies for a vacancy in the department, completes a written exam, and is interviewed by the selectmen. Selectmen then offer a candidate a position in the department and he is appointed on a probationary basis. "Up to this point in the appointment process, it is illegal to use a medical condition to disqualify any candidate," he explained.

A panel of three doctors then makes a recommendation to the state, which the town can then accept or appeal. Sestito was informed Aug. 31 that based on the medical examination, the Department of Personnel Administration Medical Occupational review Panel decided he was unable to perform the duties of firefighter "because of juvenile onset insulin diabetes. This is a condition which is adversely affected by irregular hours, mealtimes, levels of physical activities, prolonged hours and stressful situations. All of which we normally encounter in performance of the duties of a firefighter."

Sestito opposed that argument, saying he will not experience longer than normal work hours. "This is a small town. I won't be at a fire for 12 hours at a stretch, like in Boston," he said.

The firefighter said his diabetes is well-monitored and under control. "I have been monitoring my blood and giving myself insulin shots for eight years," he said. "I 'know if I"m about to have a diabetic reaction - I carry sugar with me 24 hours a day. This is a very controllable thing.

"It's no inconvenience at all," he stated.

Selectmen Chairman Rocco Laugelle supports Sestito's appeal. "As a sugar diabetic myself, I can do as well now as I could before I had the disease," he said.

When asked if Sestito should remain on the force, he answered, "I certainly do, by all means - just to see the way he has worked in the past. It is a strenuous job, and he is quite capable.

"I think that he will be a great firefighter. He's a hard worker."

Sestito, who remains on the department while awaiting his appeal, said he "really enjoys" his new career. Recently married, the firefighter said he returned from his honeymoon on a Thursday night and reported to work the next morning.

"I wanted this for a long time," he stated. "I got a chance to be on the call force right out of high school. And I really wanted to be named permanent."

Sestito, who said he would eventually like to become a paramedic in the department, said he has received a lot of support from residents, the fire chief and in town hall.

"I feel angry about this," he admitted. "But I don't like to stir the pot. I want things to go smoothly here, just to do my job."

CHS students reminisce about summer abroad

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

A lot of Cohasset kids had some pretty exciting adventures overseas this summer, and they all learned a few things as well.

"It was the best summer of my life; I'd do it again in a minute," said Andrew Rossi who spent 10 weeks soaking up rays in Greece.

Andrew, who will be a senior at CHS, stayed with a Greek family in the small village of Tragano in Greece. The American Field Service program [AFS] sets students up with families most of whom have kids in high school as well. In Andrew's case he had three,"brothers,"aged 15,18 and 21.

"We went to the beach a lot; at night we would go to discotheques or to Bazuki's. At the Bazuki's they dance around, sing Greek songs and break plates," said Andrew.

Andrew only managed to learn a little bit of Greek but it was enough to get him by.

"It was the hottest summer in fifty years," said Andrew. "We spent two days in Athens; it is a lot bigger than Boston. I also visited the Acropolis," said Andew.

School was out when Andrew arrived, so he didn't attend any classes. He spent most of his time getting to know the people and the customs of this exotic country.

"Everyone is real friendly; any stranger will talk to you."

In all, twelve Cohasset students were able to visit some very interesting countries including Saipan, Germany, Crete, Belgium, Switzerland, Malaysia, Turkey and Finland.

"Usually only three of four students go," said local AFS president Judy Dwyer. "This is a tremendous achievement. It is also a credit to the kids who went last year."

"This is really a terrific program," added Dwyer."The network is well put together. There is a tremendous amount of support. Marge Farrel of Hingham is the state coodinator. She does a great job; she's an expert at organization, a real sergeant."

"I had a really good time," said Cindy Dormer who spent two months in Portugal.

"I was in Lisbon, only about a mile and a half from the beach. We saw some of the famous castles. I got a great tan; the sun was really hot on the southern coast of Portugal. Cindy,16, is a Junior at CHS. She had two sisters ages 7 and 14 in Portugal.

"When I first arrived I didn't understand any Portuguese. Now I understand all of the key words. "Everything they do over there is different," continued Cindy, "They eat with their left hands."

"They eat seafood almost every night. I didn't like it too much; it was very rich."

At night Cindy would go to the "cafe" where all of the young people congregated, sort of the Portuguese version of "Arnolds."

"I loved it; it was a lot more exciting than being in Cohasset in the summer."

Melissa Nothnagle had five sisters in Indonesia, ages 14,18,21,23 and 24.

"They all spoke English which was nice," said Melissa. "I learned a lot of Indonesian."

Melissa attended 3 weeks of classes in Indonesia and vacationed with her host family for seven weeks.

"I stayed on Java, the island with the biggest population," said Melissa. "It is really very crowded; there are a lot of poor people."

Melissa's host family was supported by the father who earned a fairly high income working for the government.

"My sisters didn't really like to go to the beach that much; we went shopping a lot," said Melissa who brought back lots of traditional clothing.

"I definitely want to go back, I have to see my family again."

The food in itself was an adventure," stated Melissa. "They ate rice three times a day. All of the food was very hot and incredibly spicy. It is totally different from any food I have ever tasted."

"All of the people that I met were very friendly," said

AFS visits Sweden

Juliana Chittick, Laura Smart and Anna Sandell all CHS students visited Sweden a couple of weeks ago, staying with Liv Ohlsson, a classmate at her home in Falsterbo.

Falsterbo is the most southwest point in Sweden and similar to this area and the Cape.

The days were spent with Swedish friends, some already familar from visits in Cohasset, on the beach, looking at historical places, camping in the woods visiting Copenhagen with the Trivoli gardens, Kronborg, the castle of Prince Hamlet in the Shakespearedrama, or eating lots and lots of Shauze Swedish sweets.

The days are long at summertime in Sweden, the sun sets (in July) not until almost 11 p.m. and rises again at 2 a.m.!

Juliana Chittick, Liv Ohlsson, Laura Smart and Anna Sandell remember their home while away in Sweden.

The Cohasset girls and their Swedish friends stand atop a 5,000 year-old stone age grave in South Sweden. How did they get the top stone in place? Compare it to how Stonehenge in England was created.

around town

☐ The Cohasset Soccer Booster Club's annual pancake breakfast will be held Sunday, Sept. 20 from 9 a.m. to noon at the Deer Hill Elementary School on Sohier Street in Cohasset.

Tickets are $3 per person and no charge for pre-schoolers. Proceeds support the high school girls and boys soccer team. Tickets may be purchased from players or at the door.

☐ Tim Burbank, a senior at Curry College, will return as a starting linebacker for the Colonel's football team this fall.

☐ In case you are wondering why they are called "Dependable Cleaners," we sure found one reason last week! I left a few items off to be cleaned last March, then promptly forgot them until they were needed for fall. Pat Sargent not only located the items immediately, she handed me an envelope with a ten-dollar bill that she had found in one of the pockets! If that isn't grand and "Dependable," then we sure don't know what is!!!

☐ Congratulations are in order for Joe and Rosemarie Mercurio on the birth of their baby boy, Daniel Joseph Mercurio, who was born on September 5th. Daniel Joseph weighed in at 7 lbs 1/2 oz and was 20 3/4 inches long. He is positively beautiful and his brother, Marc, and sister, Andrea, will highly agree with that, we're sure!

☐ Another boy joins Cohasset's ranks, born on August 24th. Congratulations to Steven and Kimberly (Salvador) Maynard on the happy event. Welcome, Daniel Eldridge Maynard!

☐ We hear that Ruth Pratt is doing very well after her recent fall at home. Ruth received a lot of stitches in her leg, which we are sure won't hold her down for long! She is undoubtedly delivering Meals-on-wheels as we speak.

☐ Elsa and Earl Goodrich sure are beaming lately, they are new grandparents! Their granddaughter, Catherine Grace, was born to Laurie and Joseph Cleveland who live in Kingston. We'll bet that they all spend a lot of time in Cohasset!

Scott McArthur of Cohasset wasn't paying much attention to his mother, Rebecca, who had a chance to play the carillon at St. Stephen's last Sunday. (Amy Whorf)

☐ Mark A. Caughey, son of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard W. Caughey, was named to the Dean's List, the second highest recognition for academic achievement for the Spring term at Middlebury College.

Students who receive this designation at Middlebury must have earned four B's or better during the semester.

☐ Here's hoping that Priscilla Dresser is home and recovering rapidly after her stay in South Shore Hospital.

☐ Don't forget that today (Sept. 17) is Constitution Day, and our town is doing its share of celebrating! At 8:30 a.m. there will be a Flag Raising at the Town flagpole, at noon there will be the dedication of the newly named Constitution Park at the foot of Ripley Road, at 4 p.m., there will be the Bell-Ringing ceremony, part of a nationwide ceremony to honor the signing of the Constitution on this date. There will be a Carillon concert following the ringing. Finally, at 7:30 p.m. there will be a Band Concert on the Common, put on by the Brockton Federation of Musicians (if the weather is bad, it will be held at the High School Auditorium). Be sure that you are part of the gala festivities honoring the Bicentennial of the American Constitution.

☐ Al Odermatt, Chairman of the Cohasset Community Red Cross Bloodmobile, urges all to donate their blood on Tuesday, Sept. 22, from 2:30-7:30 p.m. at the Unitarian First Parish House. Al reports that there were 94 donors that participated in the last Bloodmobile, and he sure would like to see a bigger response this time! All healthy persons 17 and over who weigh more than 110 pounds, be sure to give the gift of life!

☐ Phil Mahoney called home last week, all is going real well for him. He reports that he's going to be starting for the Freshman Football Team . . . Rah! Rah! Good luck to you Phil!

☐ Finally, The Community Center sent a booklet out to all of the homes in Cohasset this week. They certainly have a lot of courses to choose from, they are to be commended on their variety! Be sure to read through the courses listed, choose yours, then contact the Center at 383-0088 for more details. By the way, doesn't the building look grand?!!

☐ Keep us informed of what is happening in your family, everyone loves to hear about it.

Local fishermen concerned with water problems

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

The fate of the local fishing industry and growing concern over the state of our waters was one topic touched upon at this week's harbor development committee meeting.

"This is a major resource that we are sitting on," explained Jack Crowley who spoke to the committee last Thursday. Crowley heads a program out of Hingham High School and UMASS Boston that gives local kids a chance to get out on the ocean and work towards pinpointing some of the environmental programs that face our waters. With the use of state funded technology, Crowley and his students have been sorting through samples and are beginning to catalog their results.

"In a lot of cases we are finding one species or one organism extremely prevalent in certain areas," said Crowley. "This is like a dump filled with cockroaches, it is an indicator."

In Crowley's recent exploring and deployment of equipment he has discovered definite marine life problems.

"The fish are obviously distressed," said Crowley.

"If you want to fill up a lobster pot," said Crowley, "go to Boston Harbor. You see the beautiful rocky coast off Cohasset and you think that there would be tons of lobsters but the fact is there aren't as many."

"The lobsters are still OK to eat," said Crowley "but in many cases the liver or the tamale are infected and very dangerous to eat. Nothing has gone offscale as far as the edible parts of the lobster; the tails and claws are fine. Some of the organs are definitely of some concern."

"The bluefish are 10-15% higher in PCB's. This is of significant concern to the mom and pop fisherman," said Crowley.

Crowley explained that the state recently decided against installing a pier near the causway out by UMASS Boston because the water was so heavily contaminated. "People fish there," said Crowley.

"A prudent person can see growth and know that there is a problem," added Crowley.

"The trends in fishing in Massachusetts Bay have not been good," said Peter Hoar of the Division of Marine Fisheries. "The lobster catch is way down and the catch of all major fin fish are also way down."

Hoar attributes the decline in the local crop to two things, "overfishing and environmental events."

"It is something we need to worry about. We are using the ocean as a resource to supplement our food and we are using it as a waste receptacle. These don't mix well," said Hoar. "It is environmental degradation, there has been a increase in demand for fish products," said Hoar. "This problem needs to be addressed."

"Fish stocks are down," said Hoar, "you can argue about the reason, but it is really quite obvious."

The minimum size of a "keeper" lobster will soon be raised up one thirty-second of an inch. The current plan is to continue to raise the length in those increments every six months until the lobster supply becomes more plentiful. The Division of Marine fisheries are extremely concerned as to the saftey of local seafood and are constantly monitoring for contaminents.

"The two things that we are immediately worried about are overfishing and pollution." repeated Hoar. "The draggers and the lobsterman clash, fin fish as well as lobster stocks are way down. We think that there is probably a lot of illegal fishing going on out there. Unfortunately it is only illegal for them if they get caught," said Hoar.

"The problem has been building for years," said Hoar. "There are all kinds of economic reasons including over capitalization, pollution and urbanization. We can't avoid it any longer."

In the meantime it might be a good idea to ask your waiter if tonight's entree is from local waters.

Hope for future

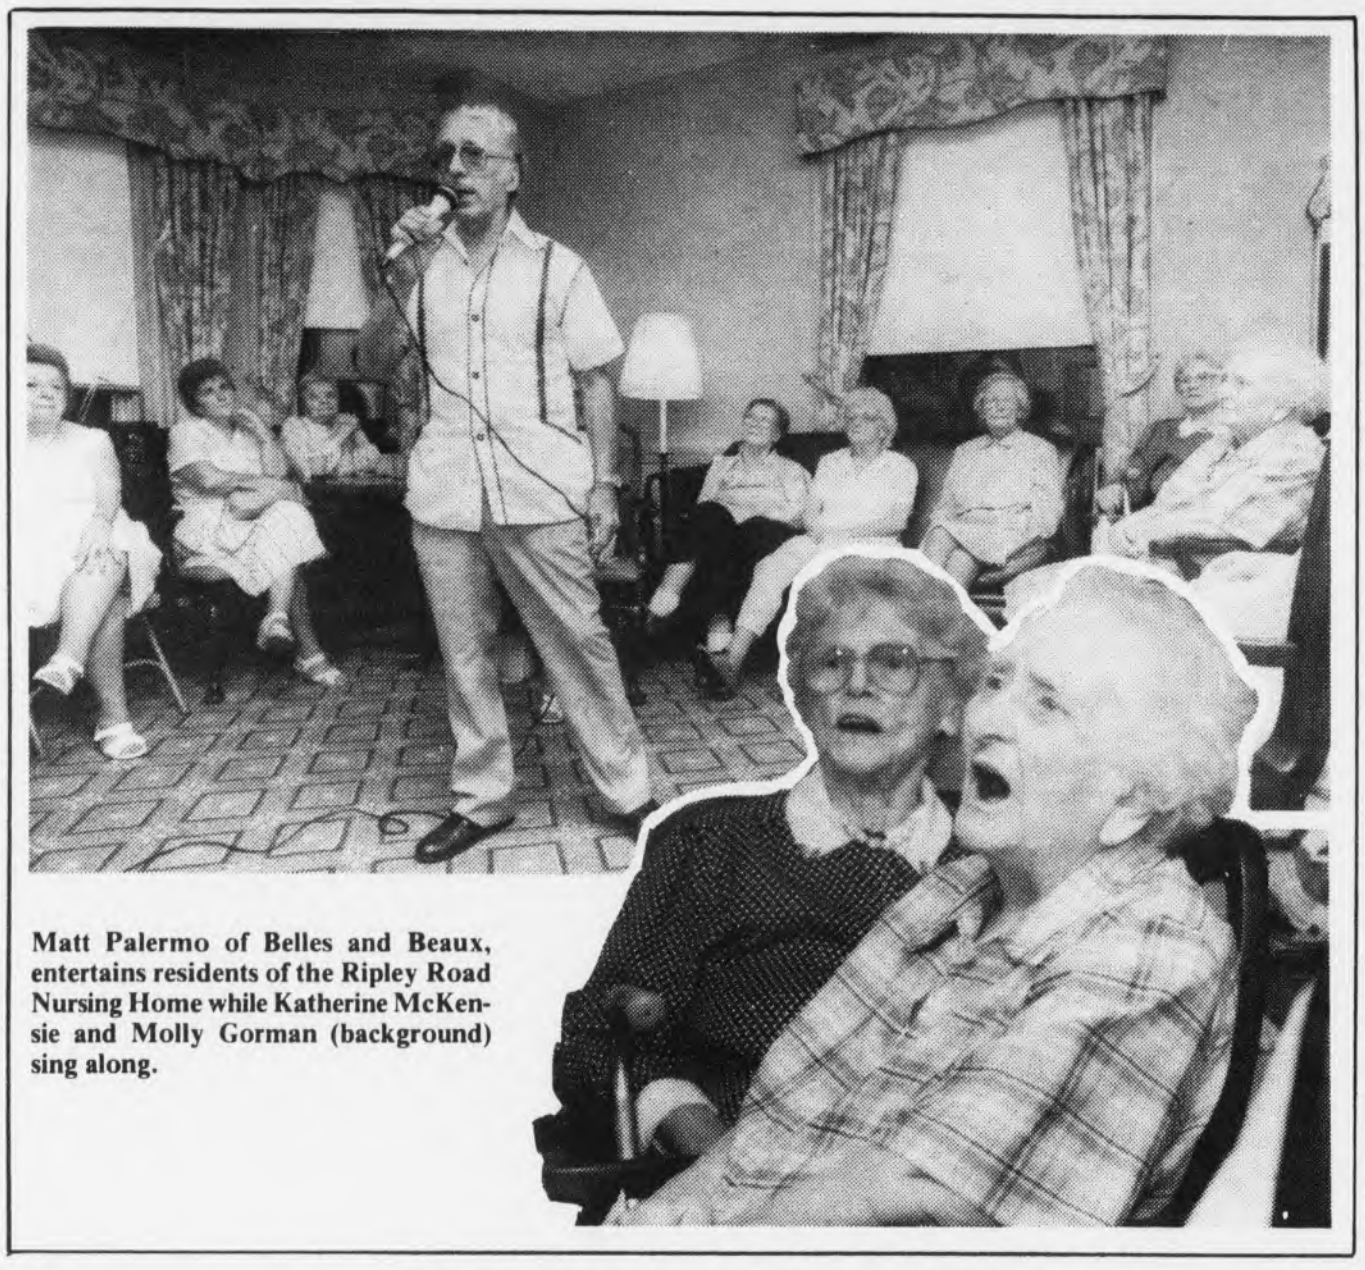
The METCO program in the Cohasset public schools is alive and well.

While other school administrators in nearby towns are wringing their hands in despair, Cohasset can breathe a sigh of relief. Thanks to some advanced planning, Cohasset became involved with a local bus company that now furnishes the transportation for this state-funded program. And the state is reimbursing the town for the full amount.

Cohasset is also fortunate to have replaced our former METCO coordinator with an equally intelligent and understanding person. Patricia Brown was selected by the school administration for her knowledge of the program, her experience in education, and her commitment to the program.

And that is why Cohasset's involvement in METCO has succeeded for more than 25 years. There are people within the Boston end of this program, and here in Cohasset, who have refused to let this vital and important program become useless and discarded.

Integration is an admirable goal for the students of Cohasset and Boston. It is important for our students to realize that other people exist outside the limits of our town borders. And it is equally significant that inner city children should learn that residents here are not suburban stereotypes who refuse to accept the harsh realities of survival.



Brown made a comment recently - that there are treasures to be found in both communities. Boston is the cultural center of this state and the east coast. Neighborhood kids in the South End or in Dorchester grow up in the midst of this culture, a few feet from a theatre, a museum or an art exhibit at a local college.

And the young people of Cohasset should appreciate the advantages they have here in the suburban South Shore. The breathtaking beauty of this coastal town should never be taken for granted. The spacious green lawns and the rolling hills of our school playgrounds can never be substituted for the blacktop of city streets and schoolyards.

The benefits we derive from families who insist on quality education for their children, and their ability to pay the high price of that education, is humbling. We should be grateful for our gifts, but we must be willing to share them.

METCO has succeeded in Cohasset. Students from Boston have been welcomed into our schools from the first grade to their last year at Cohasset High. Families for many years have willingly hosted METCO students in their homes on weekends and overnight - a gesture that these children are a part of our family and our community.

We hope the Cohasset school system continues to accept the METCO program. It is an important part of our children's education, whether they are from Boston or the South Shore. Living together in peace, communicating, and sharing is just a part of the education we all receive from this experience.

Cohasset Heights should be closed

Letters

To the Editor:

We, the Concerned Citizens of Cohasset, welcome the Zoning Board of Appeal decision not to grant Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL) a permit to expand. However, the DUMPING of trash continues; a steady increase of volatile organic chemicals in the leachate continues. The only way that our town can guarantee the protection of its precious water supply from known pollutants is to stop dumping at CHL.

The present situation at CHL is in clear violation of both town bylaws and state regulations. On the town level, CHL has been accepting trash illegally for the past five years; it is operating without real insurance, basically no insurance at all; and the dump exists in the watershed of Lily Pond. On the state level, the trash is being piled on a mound creating a dangerous pitch of three to one; instead of the state's ruling of two to one. This mound continues to grow bigger and bigger even without CHL's proposed expansion denied by Cohasset's Zoning Board of Appeal. Two-thirds of the mound are unlined letting toxic leachate seep that much faster towards Lily Pond.

Three hundred tons of trash are thrown in this dump every day. Ninety percent of this trash is brought in those blue dump trucks owned by Browning Ferris Industries (BFI). It must be noted that BFI is using the Barry Brothers, CHL and their host town, Cohasset, as its puppets. Cohasset's town officials seem unable to enforce their fine rulings such as the site assignment while spending hundreds of thousands of dollars on engineering studies. When all has been resolved and the dump is closed, it will be the Barry Brothers left cleaning up the mess at CHL, while BFI moves on to another operation.

We as a town must not be intimidated by a corporation such as BFI. Currently, CHL's site assignment is under appeal in the Land Court. The Barry Brothers and BFI are allowed to dump trash during their appeal process. (Concurrently, a fisherman has been allowed by a Superior Court Justice to place moorings in Bailey's Creek, yet while this decision is under appeal, he is not allowed to place those moorings in the creek). It is madness, of course, to allow the narrow interest of two businessmen to jeopardize an entire town's water supply. All dumping at CHL should cease and desist.

Very truly yours,

Vote should have been delayed

To the Editor:

(This letter was addressed to the Cohasset School Committee. — Ed.)

It was with great disappointment that we learned about the School Committee's decision regarding two parcels of land entrusted to you. Our feelings regarding the use of this land are not significant at this point. We are discouraged by your refusal to respond to neighbors' requests to schedule discussion of these matters at an evening meeting which could be attended by most interested parties.

Distribution of Town-owned land is a very hot issue right now. The fact that the School Committee chose to discuss this matter at an afternoon meeting is ludicrous. The School Committee is elected to monitor the educational needs of the community and ensure a quality education for the children of Cohasset. It is unfortunate that control of so much valuable property has been thrust upon you; nevertheless, it remains your responsibility to be accountable to the residents of Cohasset for your actions. The School Committee is not responsible for housing developments or building projects. Such concerns should be directed to the appropriate Town Boards. The School Committee also should not be coerced into making hasty decisions to be on time for Town Meeting Warrants. Your yielding to such pressures results in crisis management which inevitably leads to bad decision making.

The tactics used by the School Committee to avoid discussions with and accountability to the residents indicates a serious disdain for the neighbors whose lifestyle will be affected by development of this land. This uncooperative attitude is not characteristic of this School Committee and we believe you should be made aware of it to avoid such a reoccurrence.

Our request is a simple one. In the future we suggest that the School Committee as well as all Town committees and boards afford the courtesy to residents of Cohasset which we have the right to expect.

Very truly yours,
Jeff and Ellie Waal

Document was a blend of individual freedoms

By David Wadsworth
For the Cohasset Constitution
Bicentennial Committee

Thursday, Sept. 17 marks the 200th anniversary of the signing of the U.S. Constitution on that date in 1787.

At that time, the newly independent American nation, emerging victorious from the revolution against its former colonial overlords, found the road of independence to be fraught with challenges and perils. Its first experiment with national self-government had led to the Articles of Confederation of 1781. Under the Articles the new nation took the form of a loosely-knit group of quasi-sovereign states bound together by a "friendly" agreement which all to often proved more divisive than binding. Central authority under the Articles was vested in the Confederation Congress, itself a weak and ineffective construct.

By 1786 deteriorating conditions within the Confederation had led most discerning and able minds to the conclusion that a stronger national federation was needed if the new nation were to survive. Thus a Constitutional Convention was called to meet in Philadelphia during the summer of 1787. In a marathon series of sessions extending from May to September of that year delegates from 12 of the 13 states met to discuss, debate, sometimes to compromise, and eventually to agree upon the nature and frame of a new government.

Emerging from the Convention would be a Constitutional document based upon a blend of strong central government and individual freedoms; a new and innovative form of federal republic, to be presented to the citizens of the United States for their approval or their rejection. At the Convention, the road to consensus had not been easy.

Diverse political and philosophical differences, at times fueled by regional and state issues, made common agreement difficult to attain, and often threatened the unit of purpose among delegates. But by early September, 1787, a preliminary draft Constitutional document had been presented to the convention and agreed to in principal. Mid-September saw delegates from New Hampshire to Georgia ready to place their signatures on a finished version of the new proposed Constitution. All delegates, that is, except three.

From the more than 50 original delegates from the 12 states (Rhode Island not having attended the Convention at all), 39 of the remaining 41 still in Philadelphia favored the new document as written. Three dissenters, each of whom had played a major role in the framing of the document, found themselves in disagreement with the finished product and declined to sign it.

Delegates George Mason and Gov. Edmund Randolph of Virginia and Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts each felt the new Constitution contained serious and possibly disasterous flaws. They argued strongly that a second convention should be called to further strengthen certain weaknesses in the proposed frame of government. At the Convention, the three dissenters stood alone with their fears, as the majority of delegates arose to affix their signatures on Sept. 17.

Arguments for and against specific details of the document were completed on Sept. 15, and on the following day the new Constitution was sent to Messers Dunlap and Claypool, Printers, of Philadelphia, for copying and for printing of 500 copies to be distributed.

The identity of the calligrapher who wrote the famous words "We The People" is lost in history, but it has been determined that several hands actually wrote parts of the final copy of the Constitution.

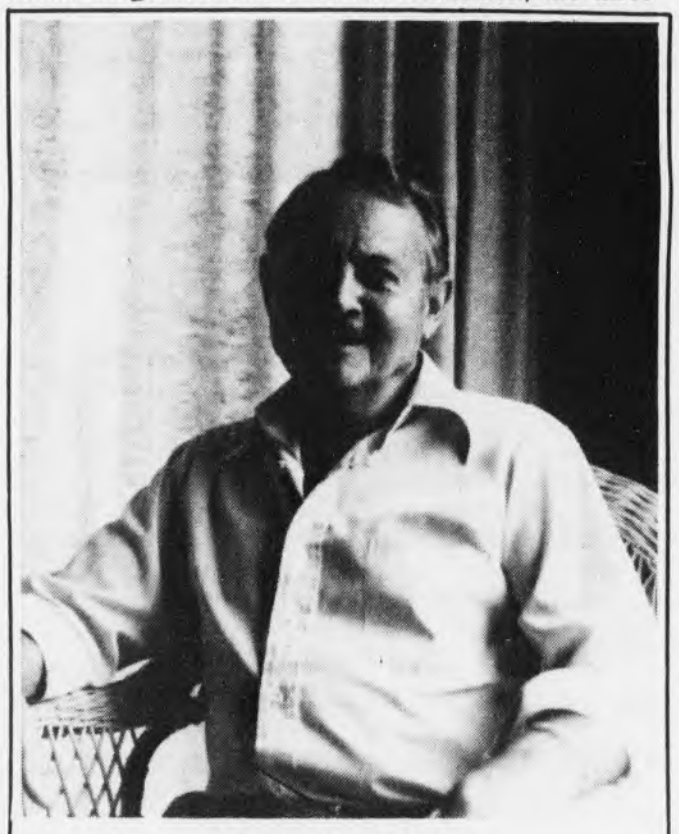
On the 17th, the delegates reassembled to hear some final arguments belatedly presented, then voted to accept the document. All present except Mason, Randolph and Gerry signed during the day's session.

In noting the culmination of four months of work by the convention, its sole Chronicler James Madison wrote "The Constitution being signed by all the members except Mr. Randolph, Mr. Mason and Mr. Gerry who declined giving it the sanction of their names, the Convention dissolved itself by an adjournment sine die". To which George Washington added "The business thus being closed", the delegates "dined together and took a cordial leave of each other".

Three days later the proposed Constitution was read before the soon-to-be replaced Confederation Congress in New York. The new Constitution itself, in proposing a tri-partite government consisting of Executive, Legislative and Judicial branches, proposed to replace the Confederation Congress with an entirely new frame of government. The Congress, a few days later, moved to send copies of the document to each state where special ratifying conventions were to meet to debate and decide whether the Constitution would be accepted or rejected by the people. The ratifying convention in Massachusetts would be held early the following year, with delegates chosen from each of the state's counties attending.

When asked what sort of government the Philadelphia Convention of 1787 had created for the United States, Pennsylvania's Dr. Benjamin Franklin relied, "A Republic, Madame, If You Can Keep It".

New director for dramatic society season



Joe Graham is the newest director to direct for the Cohasset Dramatic Club. His wealth of talent and experience, ranging from community theater to off-Broadway, brings to the Cohasset Dramatic Club, a fresh approach towards directing and an interesting philosophy of the theater.

Graham speaks with a certain amount of authority when he talks about the theater—he's spent most of his life involved in one way or the other in it. Graham began performing at the age of five at Elmira College in New York. His acting love never diminished through grammar and high school. When it came time for college, being "a little turned on by medicine" he decided to major in pre-med at Michigan University. Much to the relief of his professor father who was "slightly horrified" at the prospect of his son becoming an actor. Nonetheless after two years in the pre-med program, the lure of the footlights again grabbed hold of Graham and he ended up majoring in Speech and Drama.

After college he went to New York City, "knocked-around" for three months, realized he wasn't "ready", came home and became a reporter for the Elmira Star Gazette. Like others at that time, 1942, he ended up in the Army, as a teletypist. In his spare time he volunteered to entertain in the services clubs and recreation halls.

It wasn't until after the war that he made his serious push into theater, he again went to New York City. "I was really a little too old. I tell my students, don't linger, get yourself to N.Y., wait tables, do whatever, but you need to be there, on the scene making the rounds. Use this time, you're flexible, healthy, you can stand up to the stress, and you memorize quickly." Spring 1946 found Graham performing in a couple of off-Broadway productions, one in which he played leading man to Geraldine Page, a relative newcomer at the time.

He continued gaining experience doing summer-stock theater, doing musicals in Atlantic City and Elmira New York. With the aide of the G.I. Bill he decided to further his education as a safeguard, he received his Master's and Doctorate at T.C. Columbia. He has since taught at various universities, Eastern Kentucky State, Rutger's Univ., Illinois College and ended up at Rhode Island College where he taught for 27 years, retiring in 1982. He ended up directing more than 37 plays for R.I. College, "more plays than you would ever as a professional."

Director Joe Graham

What does he see is the role of the director? "The director is a problem solver, he has to know about the natures of people. The director has to take the printed word and translate it into visual/oral terms on the stage. He has to make it come alive. He has to be able to know about scenery, lighting, costume, makeup, everything to a certain degree. In bringing it all together, the director tries to get across the major message of the playwright."

With all the problem solving, interpreting and personality juggling, what is it that he enjoys about directing? "Seeing your conception come alive is a great satisfaction," he said. When asked whether he foresees changing his directing style and expectations when directing for the Cohasset Dramatic Club, Graham said, "Working with people in the community theater, I find is very rewarding. Their lives' experiences enrich their performances."

Graham is enthusiastic about directing "Picnic" by William Inge, for the Cohasset group.

The performance dates for "Picnic" are Nov. 13, 14 and 15, at the Cohasset Town Hall. "Theater ideally is the place that is worth going out to because you are seeing live people that are bringing you their own personal interpretation, lives and personality. Theater is a social event; people go out because they want to be out with other people," Graham said.

State aid is available now

by Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray
Special to the Mariner

The beginning of September marks the end of summer and the beginning of fall. It's also a new school year for thousands of Massachusetts students who are heading to college. For alot of those students, and many of their parents, it's also a time to worry about the money to pay for that college education.

According to the Massachusetts State Scholarship Office, loans are still available for those who need financial aid for college expenses this fall, even though they have not qualified for grants from their schools. There are also some grants available and some Massachusetts General State Scholarships. And, even though the deadline for priority consideration was May 1, some funding remains for those who qualify.

Some aid is available to part-time students who are enrolled for three or up to 12 credits in undergraduate programs. Part-time students should check with the financial aid offices of their schools to determine just what is available.

Graduate students, who already have associate or bachelor's degrees, can get aid if they are working for up to 15 credits. Graduate students can take out Guaranteed Students Loans or PLUS loans.

For the best information on what is available contact the Massachusetts State Scholarship Office at 150 Causeway Street, Boston, MA 02114. Another good source of financial aid information is the Higher Education Information Center at the Boston Public Library, 666 Boylston St., Boston, MA 02116.

Some of the types of aid available include PELL GRANTS. These are need-based grants of up to $2,100 a year for undergraduate education at an accredited school. Guaranteed Student Loans, or GLS's are available from the Massachusetts Higher Education Assistance Corporation. They are designed for anyone who has a residence in the state or is attending a school in the state.

Information on GSL's can be obtained from most local banks.

Each one of these grant or loan programs has different requirements and eligibility standards. But, there probably is one out there that meets your particular needs and circumstances. The only way to find which of the programs can help is to take the first step and contact Massachusetts State Scholarship Office, or the specific agency that administers the grant or loan program about which you are most interested.

Meet two new CHS teachers

by Peter Kasperowicz
Mariner correspondent

Two new teachers have entered Cohasset High School this year. Jack Buckley, who has taught overseas, is the new Alternative School Director; and Colleen Foley, who has studied musical injuries, is the new band director.

Raised in Brockton, Buckley graduated from Brockton High School in 1975, and continued his education at Wesleyan University in Connecticut, where he received his B.A. in psychology and education. He taught for a total of four years at Indian Head in Hanson, and Murdock in Winchendon.

Interested in teaching overseas, he quickly accepted a chance to teach in Sao Paulo, Brazil.

"It's (Sao Paulo) one of the tenth largest cities in the world, and there are something like seven million people living in it. All you see when you get off the plane is concrete," Buckley said.

The inflation rate was incredible, around 300-400 percent per year, and so my salary quickly increased. After my first year, I was making one million curzeiros. It was kind of nice being a millionaire for a while!"

His hobbies include hiking, camping, bicylce touring, and most recently, bicycle racing. He's bicycled in the mountains of Vermont and New Hampshire, Nova Scotia, the West Coast, and overseas in England and France.

In addition to being the Alternative School Director, he is teaching an 11th grade history class, and is the new junior varsity girls' soccer coach.

"I want to be involved in every aspect of school. I've heard great things about C.H.S., its students, and its staff, and so far every one has been true."

He is very excited about the language department at C.H.S.

"I've talked with George (Fortin) and Paul (Narkewicz) and I'm really impressed with their ability. If anyone out there speaks Portugese, I'd love to talk with them!"

Although still new to the game, Buckley wants to become an integral part of C.H.S. He hopes to carry on the tradition of Al MacDonald by sharing a feeling of community with the students.

COLLEEN FOLEY, BAND DIRECTOR

Colleen Foley is the new band director. Originally from North Walpole, she graudated from Walpole High School and later enrolled at U Mass at Amherst, where she received her B.A. in music and psychology. She taught music in Wolfeboro, N.H. After two years she returned to school at Eastman School of Music in Rochester, N.Y. where she received her M.A.

During her graduate studies, she enrolled in a different kind of research.

"It was sort of like the study of sports injuries, only it dealt with the injuries caused by the improper playing of an instrument. Neck strain, muscle pains, and stress can easily develop in musicians if they're not careful, and I became interested in how one could prevent those sort of things from happening," Foley explained.

She ended up working right beside those students who were working towards medical degrees, and says, "They were very interested in this relatively new field of study. They were a lot of fun to work with."

Foley became so knowledgeable in this field of study that she was invited to Germany for a national convention dealing with musical injury.

"My school helped fund the trip, and I was there for about a week. Right now, I'm waiting for my work to be published, which should be exciting."

For now, the band director is happy to be back in Massachusetts and is eager to build a solid school band.

"There is a lot of potential at C.H.S., but a lot of it is undeveloped. I realize that this is a difficult time for the band, and it's going to take lots of hard work to strengthen it," Foley says.

She hopes to work computers into the curriculum. "They have models that allow you to be a one-person orchestra, she adds. "It makes writing and composing easier and more fun."

Alternative school director Jack Buckley and band director Colleen Foley.

Outside of school, Foley plans to illustrate a children's book, and is also currently writing a score for a children's musical.

LDS 'seminary' for teens

Seminary, a Bible study course sponsored by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, will begin this week in two locations on the South Shore.

Some twenty high-school age students will meet for one hour each school morning at 6 a.m. September through May at the home of their teacher, Mrs. Gerde Edmunds in Duxbury and Mrs. Carolyn Nielsen in Hingham. The students come from several South Shore towns and attend public school each day after seminary.

The Seminary course will focus this year on the Old Testament. Over a four-year period the student will study: Old and New Testaments, Book of Mormon and Church history.

This early-morning routine is not an easy one, Hingham ward leaders admit, for either the parent or the student, but "our young people will benefit greatly," Bro. Mike Thompson explained to the group on Sunday. Seminary is a church-wide program participated in by LDS teenagers all over the United States.

Second Parish services

This Sunday, Sept. 20 at the 10:30 a.m. service of the Second Parish in Hingham (A Community Church), the Rev. Charles Giarratana will deliver a message entitled "Dreams For Your Children." Nursery and infant care will be provided.

Immediately after church there will be an intergenerational barbecue. People whose last names begin with the initials A through K are asked to bring hot dogs or hamburgers. Those whose last names begin with L through Z should bring a salad, casserole or dessert. Drinks and condiments will be provided by the church.

Students' summer abroad

Melissa. "There were aosolutely no white people."

Family life was very important according to Melissa.

"We would play games and watch the one TV station. They had old reruns of the Cosby show and an English news program on every night."

Religion was a big part of life for Melissa's family in Indonesia.

"My family were Moslems; they prayed five times a day. They don't eat pork and I stopped too."

Margot Nedrow went to Brazil, and only one other person in her family spoke English.

"Well I was quiet a lot," said Margot, believe it or not. "Now I do know some Portuguese; I went to classes for two weeks."

Margot stayed in the very isolated city of Sa'o Jose Gos Pinhais.

"They are sensitive to the fact that everyone thinks that it is a big jungle down there," said Nedrow who admitted being guilty of those same thoughts at first.

It was winter in Brazil for Margot, but she said that it felt more like a mild Fall and she went swimming anyway.

"My sister thought I was crazy, but I went in anyway." said Margot.

Margot visited the famous Falls of Iguazu.

"They are more spectacular than Niagara Falls; they are really spread out and there is always a rainbow overhead."

"The people are so friendly," added Margot. "They really go out of their way for you. People here are much more cautious. People would treat you as if you were an old friend right away."

Margot's family must have gotten a big kick out of having her visit because they threw her a big surprise going away party, with many friends and a fireworks display.

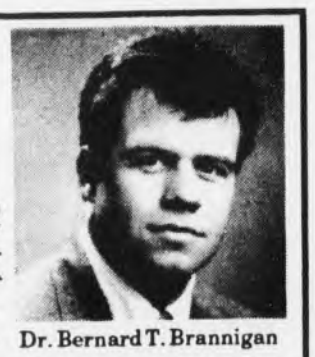
"It's great to see new places; I would strongly recommend this program," said Nedrow. "I'm very serious I would definitely go back."

The screening process has already begun for students who wish to join the AFS program this year. The students who have just returned from their trips will speak at an informational meeting at 7:30 Monday night at the High School. Prospective students, parents and interested parties are all invited.

"Most of the kids," said Dwyer, "are high academic achievers but that is not always the case. You don't have to be a straight A student. The requirements are that you have a desire to go and learn about a foreign country, that you are flexible and that you have the ability to be a good ambassador."

"This is not just a plush vacation," added Dwyer. "The kids are left to their own resources; they are not doted over. They all go through some serious self-examination."

"Everyone would say it was a positive experience," said Dwyer. Some of the kids had unpleasant experiences but they all agree that the program is a positive influence in their life."



Dwyer added, "This program has to have influenced the student's ideas on their community and how they feel about other people and places in the world. It is a very important opportunity."

Fall classes for young artists at art center

The fall line up of classes for young artists at the South Shore art Center includes some new and exciting courses.

Specific courses designed for teenagers have been added to the young artist list of classes and include a Portfolio Preparation course, Teen Darkroom and Clay Jewelry for Teens. The center, now located at 119 Ripley Road, is broadening its young artist department by developing courses geared to teenagers. Advanced Registration is required for all courses and workshops at the Center.

The Portfolio Preparation course, taught by Albert Abany, on Saturday mornings from 10:30 to 12:30 starting Sept. 26, is designed to teach high school students how properly prepare an artist's portfolio. Such portfolios are often necessary for admission to art schools and art departments of universities and colleges as well as being the basis of judgment for the awarding of many art-related scholarships or grants. Abany will work with students in the preparation and presentation of artwork in a range of media to meet the requirements for admission to art schools such as the Rhode Island School of Design or the Massachusetts College of Art.

Amy Whorf, a new instructor in the Center's photography department, will teach Team Darkroom on Saturday mornings from 10:30-12:30 starting Sept. 26. The course is designed for beginners who seek introduction to darkroom techniques looking perhaps towards working on a school newspaper or similar publications. Students will develop black and white film, make contact sheets and enlarge photos.

Clay Jewelry for Teens is a two-day workshop, Saturday Nov. 14 and Nov. 21, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. and will be led by Judy Rossman. Students will design and create jewelry in contemporary themes and colors working with white clay with acrylic painting and polyurethene finishing.

Again this fall the Center is offering a range of courses for the six to twelve year old both at its Cohasset location and at satellite locations including the Scituate Trinitarian Church, the Hingham Community Center and the Norwell Town Hall.

Nancy Connolly and Lis Wyman will teach Imagination and Observation, a course designed for ages six to eight to introduce students to a different technique each week. Sections of this course will be offered in all four towns.

Adventures in Art, for the older child ages nine to twelve, will work on the essential elements of design using various art materials including drawing, painting, printing and cut paper. Lynn Rizzotto will teach in Cohasset beginning on Sept. 24 and in Scituate beginning Nov. 5.

Red firing clay, glazes and handbuilding techniques will be taught by Serena Brundige in a new course for nine to twelve-year-olds, Learning to Work with Firing Clay and Glazes. Students will have use of the center's new kiln. She will teach three sections of this class—Norwell, Scituate and Cohasset.

Using imagination, clay and assorted feathers, glitter and paint, Syma will work with children ages six to twelve in her Creative Clay course, meeting on Wednesdays in Cohasset from 4 to 5:30 p.m. starting Sept. 23.

Playful Picture making, a course for six to ten-year-olds, will work with a variety of materials including paint, craypas and cardboard to create imaginative pictures. Susan Rodgerson and Lis Wyman, teaching in Hingham, Norwell and Cohasset, will explore color, light, texture, shape and form with projects designed to encourage students to "see with an artist's eye."

Structures—Natural and Fantastic—taught by Nancy Connolly for ages ten to twelve is a course designed to study natural forms and to have students build abstract forms in sculpture. The sculptured process will begin with observations articulated in drawings and completed through the use of clay, wire and found objects. Sections of this course will be taught in Hingham and Cohasset.

For the very young child, Nancy Connolly will teach her popular course, Moms and Tots, on Fridays in Cohasset from 10-11 a.m., with the first session beginning Sept. 26 and another session, Nov. 6. In this course mothers and their preschoolers learn art techniques and craft projects to recreate at home. The students will learn to make paints, model salt dough, create puppets, learn to use scissors and brushes.

Coming in November will be a Holiday Sample course taught by the young Artist faculty in Norwell, Scituate, Cohasset and Hingham. Students will work with a different artist and technique each week to create cards and ornaments for the December holidays. This workshop also offers young artists the opportunity to become familiar with the center's six children's instructors.

A complete course schedule detailing the times and locations of each section may be obtained by calling the South Shore Art Center, 383-9548. Courses at the center's satellite locations are being offered to make the young artist program easily accessible for families of the South Shore.

Walk for wildlife

The fourth annual eight-mile walk for wildlife, sponsored by the Massachusetts Audubon Society and Brodil's Bootery in Marshfield, will be held Saturday, Sept. 26, beginning at 9:30 a.m. Rain date is Sunday, Sept. 27.

Enjoy a fall morning and get some exercise — eight miles isn't as bad as it sounds. At the same time participants can raise funds to protect wildlife habitat and support the Daniel Webster Wildlife Sanctuary, formerly known as Dwyer Farm.

The walk will begin at the South Shore sanctuaries headquarters at 2000 Main St., Route 3A, Marshfield and proceed along Summer, Church, South River, Willow, Ocean and Webster streets to Orchard Road to the farm.

Five checkpoints along the route will offer refreshments, and once the walkers cross the finish line, they will be greeted by several Farm Day festivities.

New England contra dance music by the Unstrung Heroes and traditional harvest dances performed by the Jolly Jack Tar Morris Team from Plimoth Plantation will be featured as well as craft demonstrations by local craftspeople, including the Loomises with their wooden toys to paint.

Natural history walk

In celebration of Coastweeks in Massachusetts, a natural history walk and Duxbury Beach cleanup will be held from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 19.

The history walk will be led by Margaret Holden, the Audubon naturalist on Duxbury Beach this summer, leading walks and planning special programs.

She possesses a wealth of information about coastal ecology, especially seaside plants.

Participants should dress appropriately and bring a plastic bag and binoculars.

This is the sixth annual celebration of Massachusetts' vast and varied coastal resources.

"As more people have moved toward the coast each year, fragile estuaries, tidal flats, salt marshes, barrier beaches and rocky coves and their natural inhabitants have been given over to varied uses," said Madeleine Hall-Arber of the MIT Sea Grant program.

"Office buildings, marinas, fishing vessels, luxury condominiums, swimmers, containership facilities, restaurants and garbage now endanger some of the very resources which originally attracted the multiple uses," she said.

This event is cosponsored by Duxbury Beach Reservation Inc., the League of Women Voters and the Massachusetts Audubon Society.

Call or stop in at the Audubon's South Shore sanctuaries headquarters, 2000 Main St., Marshfield, for a schedule of other Coastweeks events scheduled on the South Shore and around the state. The telephone number is 837-9400.

De Michele exhibit

The Staircase Gallery at the South Shore Conservatory in Hingham will feature the paintings of Cohasset artist, Susan DeMichele as its opening exhibit.

The gallery hours are Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Saturdays from 9 a.m. to noon, and during scheduled concerts.

The Conservatory is located in the former naval depot, off 19 Fort Hill Street in Hingham. There is no charge for admission to the Gallery.

DeMichele received her art education from the School of the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston, and from the Kansas City Art Institute in Kansas City, Missouri. She has had one-person shows at Simmons College in Boston, at the Marion Art Center in Marion, Mass., the Quincy Co-Operative Bank in Cohasset, and at the Staircase Gallery in 1985.

Her work has been included in many group shows including those at Symphony Hall, the Prudential Center and the Federal Reserve Bank in Boston. DeMichele is an award-winning artist with First Place in Oils awards at the South Shore Art Festival in 1986 and in the Blue Ribbon Show at the South Shore Art Center and the All New England Juried Show there in 1984 and numerous other honors.

Her oil painting "Rice Island" hangs in the office of Congressman Gerry Studds in Washington, D.C.

DeMichele's work will be on exhibit at the Staircase Gallery from Sept. 11 until Oct. 11.

LWV meeting on sewage pipeline

Thursday, Sept. 17, the Cohasset League of Women Voters is sponsoring a meeting on a very timely topic — the proposed sewage pipeline off Hull.

David Kellem, president of SAVE OUR BEACHES will be the guest speaker. SAVE OUR BEACHES has gathered some startling facts:

1. MWRA is considering placement of sewage outfall pipe only 2.5 miles off Nantasket Beach.

2. PARTIALLY TREATED sewage of 43 Greater Boston Communities will be deposited through the outfall. The pipe will be about the width of the Callahan Tunnel and dump 500 MILLION gals of waste every day.

3. Other sites are considered but authorities indicate Hull is preferred location.

The Cohasset League of Women Voters urges you to attend this meeting, for the good of our town and beaches. Our coastline is one of our most valuable assets — let's try to protect it.

The meeting is scheduled to begin at 7 p.m. at the First Parish on Main Street. Refreshment served. For more information contact Debbie Cook at 383-6313 or Madeline Olney at 383-1492.

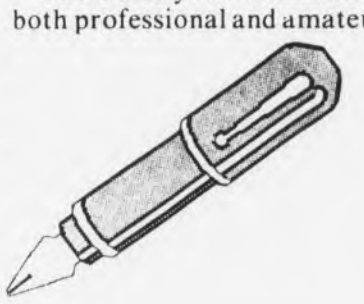
Choral Art Society rehearsals

September is open-rehearsal month for the Choral Art Society's 30th season, and all singers are welcome.

Rehearsals, beginning Sept. 14, are Mondays at 8. p.m. at the lower-level meeting room of the Scituate Public Library on Branch St. in Scituate.

The Society is a community chorus whose singers, both professional and amateur, come from almost all the South Shore communities, including Plymouth, Kingston, Duxbury, Marshfield, Scituate, Cohasset, Hingham, Norwell, Hanover, and Pembroke. For further information call 834-8962 or 545-3273.

Anne Watson, the Society's music director, has planned an interesting and varied program for the Christmas concert Saturday evening, Dec. 5. The chorus will sing part of Handel's Messiah, Holst's Christmas Day, some Renaissance Christmas choruses by Sweelinck and Praetorius, and various arrangements by Robert Shaw and others. Included will be some carols sung separately by men's and women's voices, and there will be solo opportunities for chorus members. Carol Rich of Hingham will be the new accompanist, but Dorothy Bales, board member and concertmaster, has felt she must resign, owing to increased professional engagements and conflicts of dates.



Bicentennial exhibit

The Cohasset Historical Society's Maritime Museum features a continuing exhibit of interest in this Constitutional Bicentennial year. A special display of pictures, prints, and documents relating to the nation's Constitutional Bicentennial can be seen now through the end of September.

The Maritime Museum is located at Cohasset Center. This summer all parts of the nation have participated in the observances marking the drafting and signing of our National Constitution at Philadelphia in the year 1787. The special Constitution-related exhibit at the Maritime Museum is part of the Historical Society's observation of that historic event.

The Maritime Museum, and its adjacent Capt. John Wilson Historical House, remain open through Sept. 30 each afternoon except Monday, from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m.

Plan to see the extensive collections of historical artifacts, documents and artworks relating to the history of this old New England seacoast village carefully preserved in the Historical Society's two unique buildings at Cohasset Center, and view the special Constitution Bicentennial exhibit in observance of our national republic's 200th anniversary.

Cynthia Garrett exhibit at center

The paintings and watercolors of New England artist Cynthia Maurice Garrett have been selected to hang in the invitational gallery of the South Shore Art Center as its inaugural exhibit.

The two-story skylit exhibit space of the Center's new building at 119 Ripley Road offers artists the artistic environment complimentary of a quality exhibit.

"Country Places," the inaugural exhibit for the Center, will hang in the invitational gallery from Sept. 20 to Oct. 29 with a formal reception on Sunday, Sept. 20 from 4-6 p.m. The reception coincides with the fall open house giving visitors a chance to learn about classes, meet instructors and enroll in courses.

In reflecting on the style of her work, Garrett explained that "somewhere between deep space and the paint itself, I take up residence . . . questioning everything about history, experience, reference. In drawing, I am intrigued with the direction that forms take. In color, I always search for the proper mix of green." Garrett's major interest and challenge is working in the landscape although to counteract New England winters she has become involved in floral drawings.

Garrett received the Bush-Brown Award for Best Exhibit, 1985 at the Helen Bumpus Gallery in Duxbury. She was the resident artist at the Edna St. Vincent Millay Art Colony in New York and a project member of the Ossabaw Island Project in Georgia. She has had one-person exhibits at the Helen Bumpus Gallery; the Chapel Gallery in Newton; North Gallery, Boston; and Gallery 1207, Brookline. Her work has been in invited exhibits at Southeastern Massachusetts University and at Hayden Gallery at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The public is invited to come view the paintings and Garrett's watercolors Monday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Saturdays, 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. The South Shore Art Center is supported in part by a grant from the Mass. Council on the Arts and Humanities, a state agency.

Police investigate Tuesday crash

Nardo called Burke, "our best worker.

She never skipped a beat here," he said. "Whether it was at the hair salon or the tanning salon, she was always hard at work."

Nardo said the hairdressers at the shop were close to the young woman who lived around the corner from the Elm Street business. "They used to bring her a cake and balloons on her birthday. The girls are real upset about this."

Burke was employed as a receptionist at both locations, scheduling appointments for customers and getting coffee for people in the shop. "She enjoyed meeting people," Nardo stated. "The customers were very attached to her. I think she really liked it here."

Visiting hours will be held Thursday, Sept. 17 from 6 to 9 p.m. at the Sparrell-McNamara Funeral Home, 1 Summer Street.

A funeral Mass will be celebrated at 10 a.m. Friday at St. Anthony's Church. Burial will be at Woodside Cemetery.

In addition to her parents, John F. Burke Sr. and Constance (Rogers) Burke, she leaves three brothers, John Burke, Joseph Burke and James Burke, all of Scituate; two sisters, Laurie Burke of Hull and Marianne Burke of Key West Fla.; her grandparents, Mrs. Gladys A. Rogers of Wellesley, and Mr. and Mrs. John Kenny of Brookline; seven aunts, three uncles, two nephews and several cousins.

First Minot renovation not an easy task

By David Wadsworth
Special to the Mariner

Minot's Ledge Lighthouse is undergoing its first major renovation since 1860. (Alan Chapman photo)

Minot's Ledge Lighthouse, veteran of 127 years of service in the stormy North Atlantic, has often withstood the worst that wind and wave can hand out.

This summer of 1987 sees the first major renovation to this granite structure since 1860 when the great lantern was lit for the first time. Outer Minot's Ledge, a small, ocean-swept granite outcrop some 2½ miles off Cohasset's Harbor, the site of the lighthouse, is the apex of a roughly triangular area of ledges, small islands and isolated granite outcroppings extending from Hull to Scituate, collectively called by its historic name Cohasset Rocks.

Hazardous to seafarers at any time, the Cohasset Rocks were ominously treacherous to great sailing vessels approaching Boston Harbor during the "Age of Sail." By the mid-1800s the toll of ships wrecked and lives lost on the Cohasset Rocks and nearby shores had exceeded one hundred, and the government had determined the need for a lighthouse to warn mariners away from the area of extreme danger.

Of the numerous lighthouses along the nation's shorelines, few have ever been constructed at a location so isolated — and dangerous — as Minot's. New England's winter nor'east storms have been known to push crashing seas over its 114' high pinnacle.

The construction of Minot's Ledge Light from 1855 to 1860 marked a high point in 19th-century engineering, unmatched for its time. More than 1,000 great blocks of Quincy granite — from the quarries of Quincy — were carefully cut and shaped into interlocking patterns at Cohasset Harbor, then taken by barge to the offshore ledge. As the blocks were lifted to the elevation of the tower, power for the lifting was supplied by a large steam engine, called a "donkey engine," resting on another barge at the tower's base. Minot's original oil lantern was first lit in September of 1860.

The tower itself is almost solid granite to the height of its exterior doorway. From there to its circular gallery the great granite blocks form walls for rooms used by the keepers. Surmounting the main gallery or walkway is the granite watch room, a cylindrical-shaped structure now temporarily removed. Above the watch room the lantern and its equipment dominated the tower's uppermost levels. Inside the circular watch room itself, until now, was located the tall and intricate mechanism of metal which originally served as a means of rotating the bright beam of Minot's lantern.

This giant rotating mechanism, in place from the beginning, actually was retired from active service years ago but remained as a relic of the light's earliest years. This year's renovation has seen the removal of the rotator intact, to a safe place ashore. It will be preserved as a memento of lighthouse history, near the site where the light itself first was shaped and assembled.

The current renovation of Minot's includes a replacement of the watch room, with all new granite blocks cut to duplicate the originals. The 40 original blocks, including large, pie-shaped cornice blocks supporting the light's upper gallery, have been airlifted ashore to Cohasset's Government Island, a mere few feet from where they were first cut to their finished shape a century and a quarter ago. Stonecutters are scheduled to draw patterns of each different block, and replicate each in granite closely matching the original.

Even solid stone, when assaulted by the elements long enough, finally gives way, and the granite of Minot's is no exception. Fractures in the watch room walls, caused by mechanical weathering of water seepage and the forming of ice in fracture lines, eventually caused a weakening of the structure to an extent considered at least potentially hazardous. Numerous of the fracture lines developed around the outer perimeter of the overhanging cornice blocks, where hitherto unknown remains of a previous railing of bronze were found, the cut-off remains discovered underneath the later metal floor plates of the upper gallery's walkway, still embedded in rock. Of the finely-crafted bronze and copper work at the top of the tower, most has been found to be as good as new, and will be used again when the lantern area is reassembled. Floor plates, the mullions (vertical frames) of the lantern room, the copper dome, decorative globe and its surmounting lightning rod have been stored safely, and will be returned to the light when work begins again next spring.

Coopersmith for the original construction of the light was Boston's Erastus Badger, and his signature has been found scratched on a copper plate beneath the dome. Of the recently discovered previous alteration of the lantern room area and walkway, no record has yet been found, but the stub ends of the old railing beneath newer floor plates provide evidence, and indentations in the tops of the massive cornice blocks show the existance of an older lantern room structure.

Each of the granite blocks of Minot's was interlocked to its vertical neighbors by large square bronze pins located at the upper and lower faces of the stone. Additionally, each of the upper blocks was tightly locked to its horizontal neighboring blocks by heavy bronze fittings of T-shaped design. The remains of these strengthening pins are visible in the disassembled blocks at Government Island.

Also not known until now was the existence in each block of large wooden posts fitted vertically into the upper and lower surfaces, the remains of the old rounded posts still visible. It is thought these were guide posts, to aid in correctly positioning the blocks during construction. In all, the intricacies of 19th-century construction engineering as used on the Minot's Ledge lighthouse structure have sometimes challenged those working to restore the light, and have generated a genuine admiration for the unmatched ingenuity of its original builders.

Today, the lifting power needed to transport Minot's granite blocks, most of which weigh more than a ton, is supplied by a single large steam engine, mounted on a floating barge along side the tower. Times have changed, and so have techniques.

For this winter, the open top of Minot's has been sealed against the storms of the coming season, the work crews have returned to the safety of dry land as their 1850s counterparts did, and the work of restoring this most historic of lighthouses awaits the return of fair breezes and calm seas in the spring of next year.

Consistent play defeats Hull varsity soccer

By Peter Kasperowicz
Mariner correspondent

Cohasset's boys' varsity soccer kicked off to a good start last Tuesday, defeating Hull 13-1 in its first game of the season.

From the start, the boys consistently held Hull's side of the field and had plenty of shot opportunity. Co-captains Ian Smart and Todd Fitzpatrick led the assault with two and three goals respectively; Fitzpatrick also tallied up an incredible three assists.

Jay Marsac, the third co-captain, was hindered by a leg injury half way through the first half after being tripped up by a Hull player.

"He just unleashed on me," said Marsac, who was taken out for the rest of the half.

Unable to penetrate Cohasset's defense for most of the first half, Hull caught Cohasset off guard with a well-placed shot, making the score 5-1. After that Hull rarely got within shooting range.

Steven Myers led Cohasset's defensive unit by playing alertly and intensely throughout the game, often contributing to important Cohasset recoveries.

By the end of the first half the score was 7-1.

Cohasset continued to control the ball throughout the second half, and scored on six more occasions before time was called.

Much as some players shone, the win was not an individual effort. Coach Dan Magner allowed most of his team playing time and his philosophy worked. Individual scorers were: Jason Cameron, one goal, two assists; Jimmy Gallagher, one goal; Jimmy Reidy, two goals, one assist; Kostas Roukanakis, two goals; and Dave Shultz, two goals.

The team faces Abington on the 17th, and Norwell on the 22nd. Both games are at home and should start at 3:30 p.m.

Influenza vaccine available

The Massachusetts Department of Public Health is preparing for the approaching flu season by distributing 256,000 doses of influenza vaccine to Massachusetts cities and towns. The vaccine will be distributed in mid-September to local boards of health, and DPH is urging them to hold immunization clinics by mid-October.

"Last year, influenza started showing up in November, which is much earlier than usual," said Lynne Mofenson, M.D., Director of the DPH Communicable Disease Control Division. Incidence peaked by the end of December with the greatest number of cases reported among school-age children and younger adult population, groups not usually vaccinated against influenza.

"Fewer cases among the elderly and other high risk groups last year may have been the result of extensive vaccination programs," said Dr. Mofenson.

Because immunity from previous innoculations declines and new strains of flu are expected, Dr. Mofenson urges persons who were vaccinated last year to seek immunization again. The new vaccine formula consists of inactive strains of three types of flu expected to be prevalent this season: A/Taiwan, A/Leningrad and B/Ann Arbor.

If outbreaks of flu-like illness occur in day care centers, schools or other large institutions, local boards of health are requested to notify the DPH. Any sudden increase in absenteeism or illness warrants an investigation.

For further information about the influenza, contact your local board of health or personal physician, or the DPH Communicable Disease Control Division at (617) 522-3700.

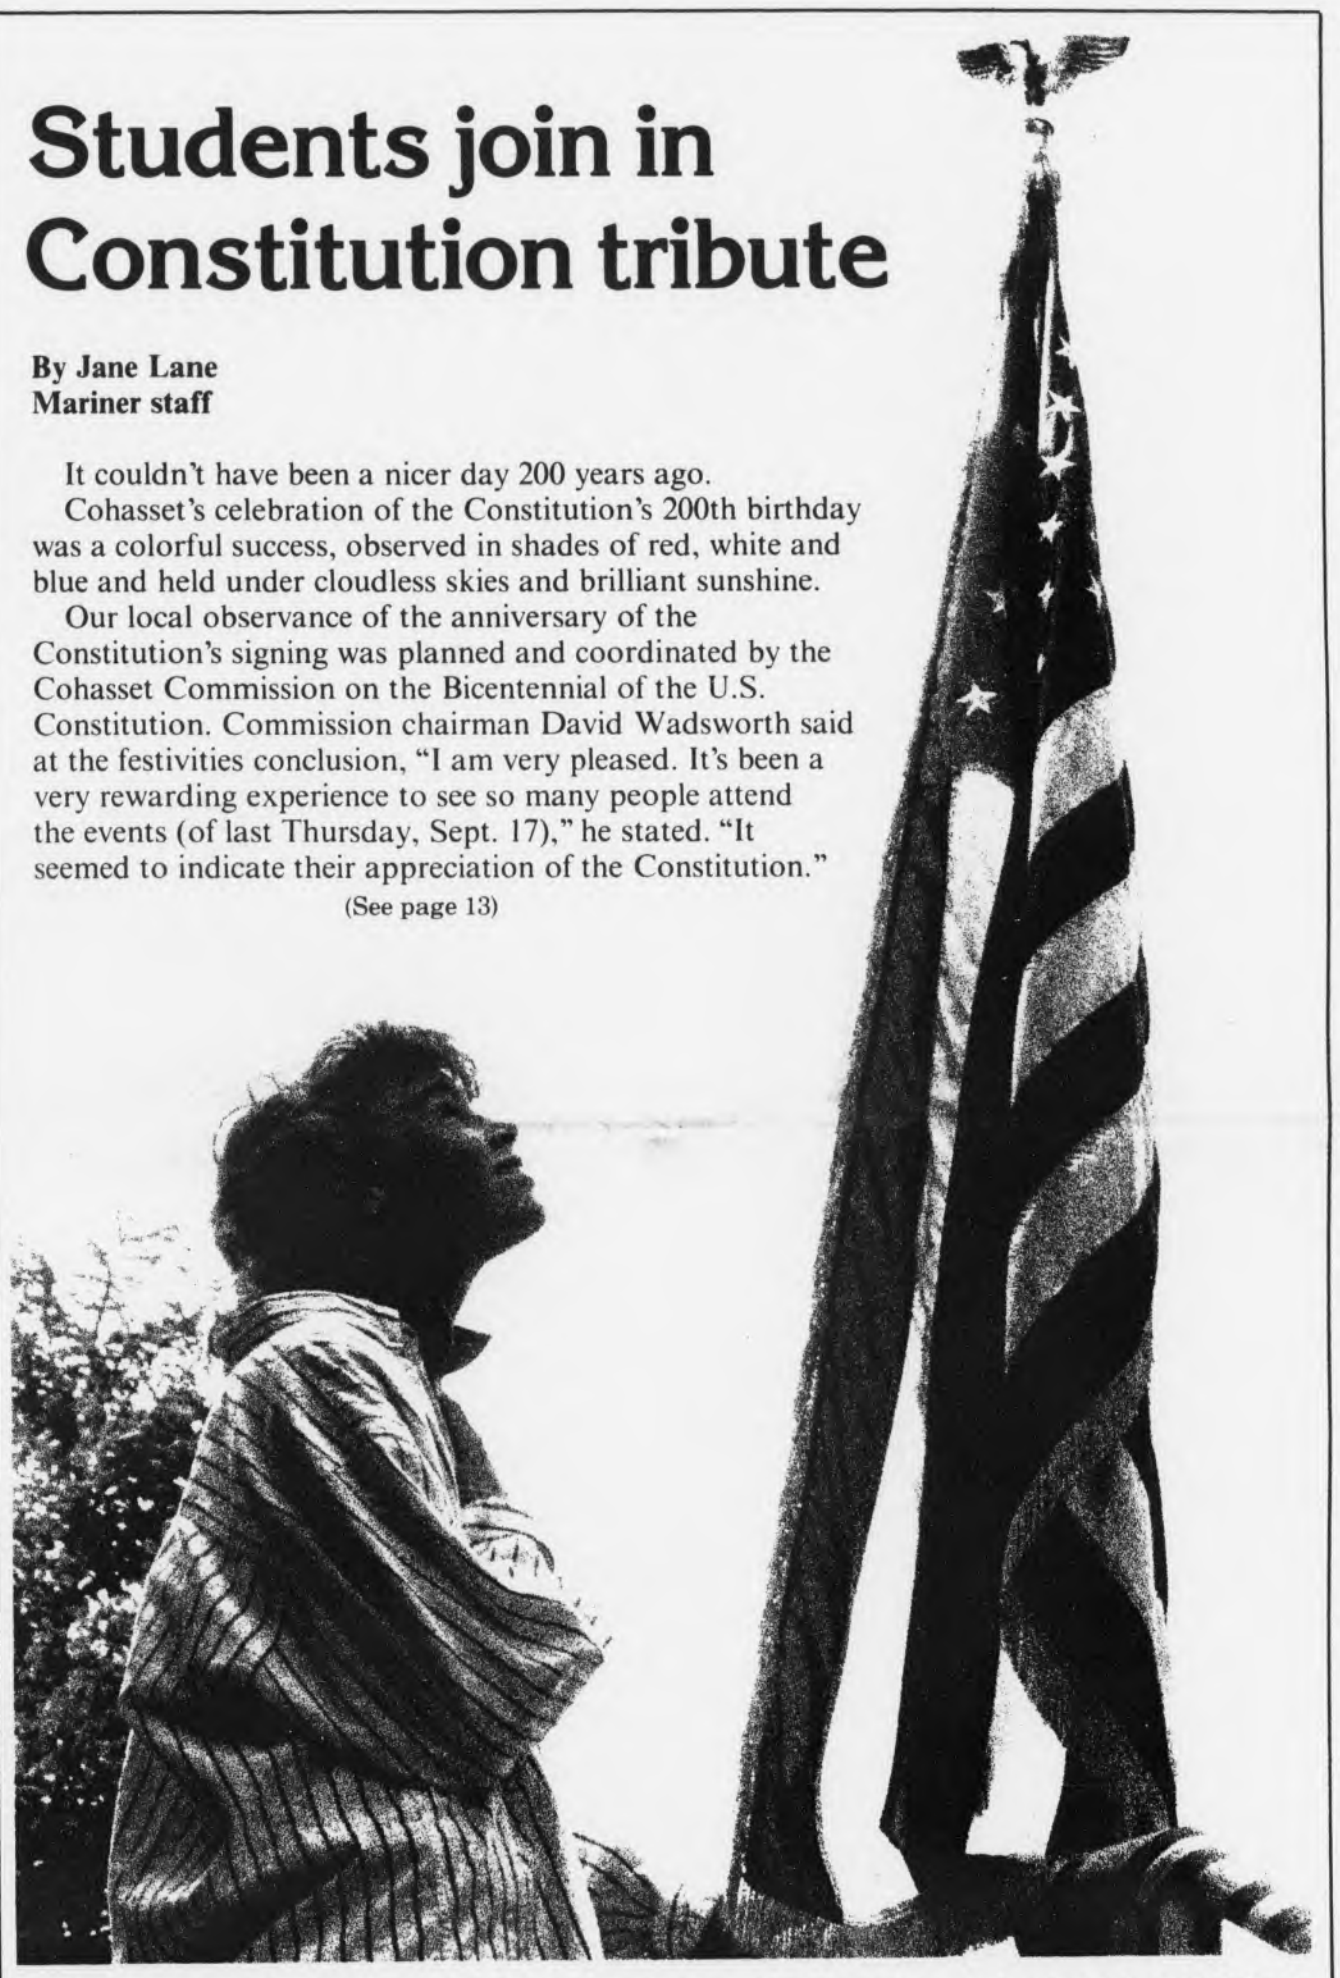
Students join in Constitution tribute



By Jane Lane
Mariner staff

It couldn't have been a nicer day 200 years ago.

Cohasset's celebration of the Constitution's 200th birthday was a colorful success, observed in shades of red, white and blue and held under cloudless skies and brilliant sunshine.

Our local observance of the anniversary of the Constitution's signing was planned and coordinated by the Cohasset Commission on the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution. Commission chairman David Wadsworth said at the festivities conclusion, "I am very pleased. It's been a very rewarding experience to see so many people attend the events (of last Thursday, Sept. 17)," he stated. "It seemed to indicate their appreciation of the Constitution."

Town to observe AIDS awareness week with seminar

Cohasset will observe AIDS Awareness Week.

The Board of Health in conjunction with the Social Service League of Cohasset, will host a first-of-its-kind South Shore panel discussion on AIDS, the deadly virus predicted to kill hundreds of thousands of people in this decade.

October 4, from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m., a panel of medical professionals and AIDS experts will speak about the disease and answer questions from the public. The panel discussion, which will be held at the town hall, will be moderated by Jeanne Blake, medical reporter for WBZ-TV.

The idea for "AIDS Addects Us All " generated from a similar panel discussion held last summer. Cohasset's Public Health Nurse Mary Ann Hansen attended the seminar, "because I was interested to see what other towns were doing to meet the public health problem of AIDS head on," she explained.

"The most prominent fact I received from that event was the need for education - for the public to hear the facts, to dispell the myths and allays their fears. People need to know the facts to avoid contracting this terrible disease," Hansen added.

Parents are urged to attend this informational discussion, along with their children. Hansen recommended that youngsters from junior high age on, attend this seminar along with their parents. "The young people need to know the facts," she stated.

Among the speakers participating in the Oct. 4 discussion will be Jeff Epperly, health educator from the AIDS Action Committee. Hansen remembered him from the Newton seminar as a "dynamic speaker. He gears his talk beautifully to lay people - to parents and their teens. I also liked him because he didn't publicly condone the use of condoms, but he talked about abstinence as the only sure way to prevent this disease."

Hansen explained that the deadly AIDS virus is only activated in certain "high risk" groups, including people who share hypodermic needles, and those who contract the disease through sexual transmission.

"We have to start with the children," she added, "and give them the values to begin with. Sexual action is something to be used responsibly by adults.

"But our youngsters feel immortal - nothing will ever happen to them, So you see there is a great need for this education," Hansen said. "People must realize the importance of avoiding high risk behavior - such as the use of dirty needles and indiscriminate sexual activity."

Epperly will be the keynote speaker of the evening. Joining him at the podium will be Mindy Mazur from the state Department of Public Health, whose office conducts AIDS testing. Jane Parker is a social worker with the South Shore Hospice. She is a visiting nurse who has worked with the psycho--social aspects of AIDS, dealing with the patients and their families.

Cohasset School Supt. Stephen Hart will participate in the discussion, commenting on the school department's plans to incorporate AIDS education into the health education curriculum. A physician is also

Even if town okays SEMASS, there's no room now

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

As the town landfill is filling up, the issue of who will accept Cohasset's trash has become clouded.

Even if town meeting approves a contract with SEMASS to accept refuse from a new transfer station it is far from certain if SEMASS will have room to accomodate us.

"We are not going to be included in the facility they are building now," said Priscilla Tebbetts, chairman of the disposal area committee, who was apprised of this news verbally last week.

"If we do approve a contract it will be for an addition SEMASS intends to put on to their planned facility in Rochester Mass.

Although constuction of the $208 million SEMASS resource recovery station is not finished a need for an addition has already been established.

Tebbetts explained," SEMASS has a way to go for funding at this point. They have to have proof for their lenders that they will have business."

SEMASS is a private company and will be generating enough electricity from their plant in Rochester to light 50,000 homes.

Originally the reason for the upcoming special town meeting was to sign a contract with SEMASS to accept our refuge. Presently there is not a contract.

"They never told us in writing that we were or were not going to be included in the Rochester facility," said Tebbets who hopes to have a contract by the Oct. 26 town meeting.

The disposal area committee is now seeking approval of funds for a design of a transfer station to be located at the dump. The station would prepare trash to be trucked to the Rochester plant.

"We are hoping to get approval of design fees so when we do have a contract we are prepared," said Tebbbetts. "It is a part of the problem and it can not wait until the last minute."

The disposal area committee continues to look for alternatives to SEMASS but the solutions are not feasible.

"We are always looking for a better deal," said Tebbetts. "The plants are very costly to build and there are many restrictions. There just are not that many facilities. We are on hold.

Cohasset's week...

Building variances

The zoning board of appeals last week granted several variances to the town so that the sale of the Independence Building on South Main Street can be finalized.

The tiny lot does not meet the town's requirements for area, front setback, side or backyard square footage. Variances were granted for all, in addition to an easement that was approved so the public can continue to use the concrete steps at the side of the building to St. Stephen's parking lot.

Selectmen sold the building almost two years ago to Atty. Noel Collins. His bid of $86,000 was the highest they received for the former gown museum building. During a deed search, it was discovered that the land at 24 South Main Street was never divided from the town's common land.

The board noted in its decision that there was no other way to divide the structure from the remainder of the common land without infringing on the rights of the neighbors. The board approved a 2,161 piece of common land that was cut out specifically for the building.

Free exercise class

A therapeutic exercise class scheduled this fall at the Cohasset Community Center, will be offered free.

Council and Aging and Community Center officials received the good news last week that federal grant money will be available for this first-of-its-kind community program. A fee of $40 per person was originally set for the class.

The class is set to begin at the Cohasset Community Center the first week of October. The exercise class is designed for wheelchair-bound persons and other handicapped people. Transportation to the class will be provided by the SCOOT van.

All costs associated with the one-day a week program will be absorbed by the $5,500 federal grant. Transportation will be provided free to all participants. The grant will cover the cost of the teacher and the transportation, according to Senior Center Director Kathy Bryanton.

"Anyone who is disabled is welcome to join," she said. "We will have a physical therapist here is capable of organizing programs for each individual." The program will continue for ten weeks this fall. After that time, the therapist will reassess their progress and make changes to their exercise program.

This first-time community program will be free, but Bryanton noted that donations are welcome. Because it was a federal grant for the program, they will still be able to accept donations. "Any money we receive will be put back into the program, to expand it so that we can continue to offer it many more people," she explained.

Anyone who is interested in participating in the therapeutic exercise program should call the Cohasset Senior Center at 383-9112.

. . . Cohasset's week

Art curriculum

The school committee recieved a neatly packaged and very professionaly done art curriculum at Monday nights meeting. The curriculum is the final product of almost a year of work by art teachers Jean O'Malley and Colleen Lucas.

Funds from the Horace Mann grants for special projects allowed O'Malley and Lucas to pursue this goal.

"It was rewarding, challenging, and exciting as it started to all come together," said O'Malley. "The weeks of work along with the guidance of proffessor John Leary, our ideas and input from the community made this possible."

Lucas and O'Malley both attended workshops with Leary who is known for his work with art currriculums.

O'Malley works with students from the beginning of school until the sixth grade. Her program starts with the most basic elements of art such as line and texture and works up to three dimensional drawings.

"With this curriculum," said Lucas who teaches art at the Jr High and High school level, "I know what the kids know and we can build on that. If I can convince them to love art in the seventh and eigth grade then I've got them."

"I'm delighted that the overall perspectives are being shared," said Diana Kornet of the school committee.

"It is nice to know that the kids really want it," said principal Mary Ellen Gallagher who related that all art classes were completely filled three days into the school year.

"This is a lasting document," said Superintendent Steve Hart. "It is also dynamic and will contribute to continuity within our program. This is a great example of what can be done with the Horace Mann act. I'm looking forward to see what other things it will bring our way."

Roosters are back

The roosters are back in Cohasset Harbor. Five local fishermen have returned to Cohasset Harbor this week having appealed a restraining order to keep them out filed by the town early in the summer.

The roosters get their name by temporairily roosting their boats on vacant and unused moorings. Former harbomaster Harry Ritter cracked down on the fairly common practice of roostng this summer, demanding that all boats without moorings exit the harbor immediately. The town backed Ritter up with court action against seven fishermen.

According to town counsel Richard Henderson the Massachusetts Appeals court has ruled that five of the fishermen; Tom Lagrotteria, John Barret, Dana Waitkus, Richard Morse and Michael Ward can continue to work out of the harbor pending their appeal.

Attorney Chester Janiak who is defending Lagrotteria, Barret, Waitkus, Morse and Ward is arguing that the harbor has been run in an unfair, discriminatory and arbitrary way. Janiak believes that his clients are being singled out and that moorings have existed without permits and that there have been moorings that have not been used.

Two fishermen, Richard Barrow and Dale Sylvia, were not represented by counsel and had not removed their boats.

According to Atty. Henderson, "They were not represented and they didn't appeal. They have contempt proceedings filed against them."

Meanwhile the action in Cohasset harbor is moving from the town landings to the state courts.

Hull resident warns LWV, 'pipe coming your way'

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

David Kellem, the president of Save Our Beaches, is very committed to his cause. Kellem discussed some of the rapidly developing issues that face our local waters at Thursday's league of women voters meeting.

Save Our Beaches {SOB} was organized by concerned citizens in May. Already it has over 300 members, a newsletter, almost 4000 names on a petition and along with that some clout with the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority.

"When we started," said David Kellem, "we really knew nothing except that we were facing a serious threat. We proceeded to educate ourselves and found out that we are facing an issue and a serious problem."

Presently the MWRA is considering the placement of a sewage outfall pipe 2.5 miles of Nantasket Beach. The partially treated sewage of 43 Greater Boston communities is to be deposited through this pipe which will be very similar in size to the Callahan tunnel and dispose of five hundered million gallons of waste every day. According to Kellem, the MWRA intends to begin pumping five years before a new treatment plant is finished, leaving most of the waste coming out of the pipe untreated. Although the Hull sight has not been officially chosen, sources have told Kellem that it is the leading contender.

Save Our Beaches has adopted the policies that insist that MWRA select the safest, most distant site from shore. Also SOB believes that the MWRA should not select the outfall sight until adequate environmental, health and scientific studies are completed. Save Our Beaches also believes that sewage should not be pumped until a secondary treatment facility is completed.

"The whole horror story," said Kellem, "begins in Boston harbor. The dumping of industrial wastes, toxins, and improper sewage treatment have been going on forever."

Originally the M.D.C. was in charge of the 43 communities that have their toilets flush into Boston harbor. Their success was negligible. In 1982, prompted by pressure from present state senator Bill Golden and others, Judge Garrity issued an injunction for all sewage hookups in Boston. The decision was overturned in two days, but according to Kellem, "That got the ball rolling."

Massachusetts Water Resources Association has accepted the reigns from the MDC and plans to safely and economically clean up the situation.

"Their plan is to build a primary and secondary treatment plant," explained Kellem. The job of the primary plant would be to let the sewage set and seperate the sludge from the liquid waste. The secondary plant would turn the sludge into landfill and compost and bury it.

"This system can work," said Kellem who added that in the past the raw sewage was all just pumped into the harbor. "The MWRA is committed," said Kellem.

The waste will be collected at Deer island and then would be trucked away. The remainder of the waste will travel through the outfall pipe.

"It's coming your way," said Kellem who pointed out that Cohasset is quite visable from the site near point Allerton in Hull.

"The fact is," continued Kellem, " that there will be primary sewage [untreated] coming out of that pipe for five years. During the construction time they are not going to wait for a secondary treatment plant to be built."

As a result of the work that Save Our Beaches has done Kellem has been invited to be a non-voting member of the MWRA. Previously there was no representation from the South Shore despite the favored Hull sight selection.

"We stuck our noses in and within weeks we were invited to voice our concerns," said Kellem. "It would cost maybe 100 million to put the pipe way out," added Kellem. "But if you are going to take chances with the environment, and they are, we think that they should take the safest route. The MWRA has refused to acknowledge that the safest sight is the furthest sight out to sea.

The decision from the MWRA board of directors as to the exact location of the sewage outfall pipe is due in mid-November. This decision is somewhat effected by an environmental study presently underway.

"The MWRA is under the gun," said Kellem. "Our arguement is not, we don't want this thing in our backyard. We want them to make the best decision for the environment."

Kellem and other members met with local town councels to discuss forming a coalition of towns to take the MRWA to court. SOB is contributing $10,000 to help Hull with the initial court proceedings.

"We have to accept this kind of a system," said Kellem, "The best way to protect ourselves is to put the sight far enough out."

The proposed outfall pipe is a very expensive proposition. The rough cost of the pipe is about 20 million per mile. The length will be between 4 and 8 miles.

"That is the problem," said Kellem, "they want to do it cheap."

Most of the financing for this 267 million project will most likely not be coming from the ratepayers. Placing the pipe too far out could possibly have an impact on valuable fishing grounds.

Kellem suggests that working through the board of directors of the MWRA is the most logical plan for the concerned citizen.

"It is important that we let them know that we are serious and that they have to take our needs into consideration."

No promises . . .

Honesty allows you to sleep at night

By Jane Lane
Mariner staff

If honesty is the best policy, then it surely brings happiness, too.

Last July, James W. Lee of Dorchester called Carousel Antiques on Ripley Road. An elderly man, he is considering selling his home, and is now parting with some of the furniture within the home. He asked Carousel owners Amanda and Tom Burgoon if they would come and look at various old and treasured items in his house.

As Amanda recalled, "we decided to buy a large bookcase and desk piece along with some other pieces and some miscellaneous items." The Burgoons, who have owned the antique and used furntiture store for the past 12 years, frequently buy furniture from private homes and sell it from their Cohasset store.

It wasn't the furniture that was so unusual - it was the content. As Amanda explained, "we had already cleaned the desk out and had sold it. We were about to load it into the truck to bring it to the new owners when a roll of money fell out from one of the drawers."

Apparently, she figured, the roll had been lodged somewhere within the piece of furniture, and was loosened by the movement.

The Burgoons quickly counted the money - about $300, she said. "We did what we always do when this happens," she explained. Her husband drove the money from Cohasset back to the original owner in Dorchester - who in this instance had no idea the money had been stashed away in there.

"It was a complete surprise to me,' Lee stated.

"It wasn't such a great surprise to us," Amanda laughed. "This happenes every once and a while, and we've always given the money back."

"Mr. Lee is such a sweetheart - we never would think of keeping the money - never!"

The more he thought about the retrieved money, the more Lee realized it was not such a shock. His uncle, who died of Alzheimer's disease, had often stashed money away in various locations throughout the house and forgot where he had placed it.

"But what surprised me," he explained, "was the integrity of these people from Cohasset. I met them for the first time five or six weeks ago, and here they were giving me back money they found. It was their integrity that I found so unusual."

Lee telephoned the Mariner with the facts, anxious to spread the good news about Carousel Antiques to the public.

The Burgoons found this amusing and a bit perplexing. "We've always made it a practice to give back anything we find in the things we buy. It doesn't happen frequently, but sometimes people forget where they've placed things, and sometimes they end up in the items we buy," she stated. "But we always give it back. Otherwise, we could never sleep at night."

"They are," Lee contended, "a very unsual, gracious couple. They were so nice, in a way I'm not surprised by their honesty. But they should be commended for their integrity, especially in this day and age."

A retired U.S. Postal Service worker, Lee said it was difficult parting with much of the funriture within his Dorchester home. "I guess the sentamentality of it kept us from selling these things before," he admitted. "But I'm so happy we sold it to the right people. It makes me feel that much better."

Charges sought against two men

A hearing to determine whether charges of rape will be filed against two men is scheduled for Oct. 30 in Quincy District Court.

According to Cohasset police, applications for complaints have been filed by a 17 year-old female and a female juvenile. The complaints are being sought against James L. Johnson, 21, of 526 Country Way in Scituate, and Eric W. Ben-David, 25, of 87 Elm St., Apt. 3.

Police said the alleged incident occurred Friday night, Sept. 18. According to police reports, three girls were at Ben-David's apartment with the two men. Police received a call about 12 a.m., and one girl was transported to South Shore Hospital for tests. Cohasset police notified the Norfolk County Rape Unit. Alberta Desa from the Norfolk County Sexual Assault Unit is investigating the charges.

Police said after interviewing the persons involved, it was decided that the women and not the police, would seek criminal complaints against the men. There was no violence involved in the incident, police said.

According to police, complaints are being sought against Johnson for two counts of rape and one count of indecent assault and battery, and two counts of indecent assault and battery against a juvenile.

An application for a complaint has been filed against Ben-David for one count of rape and one count of indecent assault and battery.

A hearing before a court magistrate is scheduled Oct. 30.

School open: Brady resigns

In his report on the opening of 1987/88 school year superintendent Steve Hart assured the school committee that it was a very smooth opening.

"We survived," joked Hart. "A lot of people did a lot of work and we all got here eventually," said Hart reffering to last minute bus route problems.

Hart explained that although the overall enrollmnent continues to go slightly down the lower grades are showing a slight increase.

"The Osgood school might be considered a little overcrowded," said Hart. "There is a lack of facilities; there is no lunch room and they could use a larger library. The building inspector looked at it and said that the school is looking very good for its age."

The School committee accepted with regret the resignation of Math teacher Claire Brady. Brady, well known for her patience and understanding with her students will be taking over a full time postion in the Hull school system.

Coalition supports cooperate purchasing plan

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

The South Shore Coalition is seeking state funding to study the feasibility of cooperative purchasing.

Ellie Seaton of the consulting firm Bennett & Shaw will help the 10-town organization petition the Executive Office of Communities and Development for funds.

"Last year," she told the coalition representatives, "the North River Collaborative submitted a grant application to the EOCD to study the feasibility of collective purchasing, feeling there was a great opportunity for purchasing between communities and schools.

"EOCD awarded them a grant of $12,500 to study that, and we were chosen as the consultant to do the project," Seaton said.

"We collected a great deal from the collaborative in terms of the products they purchased, the process they went through, who they bought their products from, as well as volume and prices," she added.

"We had a bit of a problem," she said, "because the people making the purchases are generally very overworked people, town accountants and school business managers. But they were all very cooperative. They really expressed an interest in doing something like this."

Seaton said she received some "startling" information.

"In one case," she said, "we found that two communities were purchasing the same thing from the same vendor, but at markedly different prices. We also found that four of the five communities we studied were buying products from the same firms.

"We thought maybe they didn't save any money," she said, "but maybe they could if they went to the company and said, 'Hey, we're doing this for five communities. Can we get a package deal?'"

Seaton noted, "It was as much information for those communities as anything else. They were really able to look through it and say, 'Hey, this person is buying from this vendor at a smaller price.'"

In the analysis, Seaton said she found that between two school systems, one was paying 10 cents more for a smaller loaf of bread. Between two communities, one was paying $1 per ton more for a greater volume of road sand than the other.

"I think it was a bit of a shock to some of the towns," she said. "We expected some negative reaction from the people who do the purchasing, but surprisingly, they were very excited about the possibility of doing some collective purchasing."

Along with its analysis, Bennett & Shaw provided the North River Collaborative information on other purchasing collaboratives, and identified products, such as fuel oil, diesel fuel and road sand, which often are easy to package purchase, Seaton said.

"In addition to cooperative purchasing," she added, "we had another exciting idea. We do a lot of work in capital planning, and thought there is a possibility of doing a study on the sharing of capital equipment."

Seaton said she understands there are pieces of equipment all towns like to own and take care of. "But there are things we don't use all that much," she explained, "road sweepers and that kind of thing could be shared by a number of communities.

"There are a lot of variables of course," she said, "placement, time, maintenance costs and several other factors. If we were to do a study like that, we would first inventory what everybody has, find out how much they use it and how much other communities would use it, and then do an analysis of replacement costs and schedules, which would help us determine what fees would be charged for renting from one community to the other."

Seaton commented, "We're all looking for ways to save money and maximize revenues and still provide the same services."

The South Shore Coalition will work with Seaton to prepare the grant application in time for EOCD's Nov. 1 deadline.

Coalition Chairman Janet O'Brien, a Hanover selectmen commented, "I think the coalition has begun an effort that is very cooperative and we see people sharing in a lot of ways that haven't occurred before, things like shared planners and personnel. I really think there is a tremendous potential.

"Talking to some of the department of public works superintendents," she said, "I know there are some folks who have catch basin cleaners who only use them a few times per year. And one community this year couldn't use theirs because they didn't have the money to pay the personnel

"There are advantages to renting the equipment out, rather than letting it sit around just accumulating dust," O'Brien said.

Selectman Brian McDonald of Weymouth noted, "We had discussed this a couple of years ago as a coalition, collective purchasing. But we found a survey impossible to do on a part-time basis.

"If you could save each community a dime per gallon on fuel oil, you're talking about 65,000 gallons," he said, "that's quite a savings."

Seaton agreed. "We have a lot of information on fuel oil. That's probably the biggest thing people buy, and it's got to be the world's most complicated, but I'm willing to do a lot of digging.

Seaton offered her services for preparing the grant application "without obligation."

To receive a grant, the 10 coalition towns must provide 25 percent matching funds.

"If this is successful," O'Brien predicted, "it could grow and grow."

Environmental attorney says towns have to be tough

Gregor McGregor, an attorney who concentrates on environmental issues, told South Shore Coalition members and a number of local officials that health boards in the coalition's 10 towns have to get tough.

In the face of hazardous waste, population boom and engineering innovation, McGregor said health boards must take the home rule initiative to protect their communities.

"How can home rule be utilized by health boards?" he queried. "We know that towns have home rule bylaw power and town meeting can adopt sand and gravel bylaws without waiting for the state's okay.

"Conservation commissions can adopt home rule wetlands protection bylaws without having to ask the department of environmental quality engineering," he noted, "and we know the towns can adopt aquifer protection bylaws, hazardous materials bylaws and sign bylaws, all under the home rule power, without the need to use zoning procedure or get a two-thirds vote.

"So there is an entire range of local law to protect the public health, safety and welfare," McGregor said.

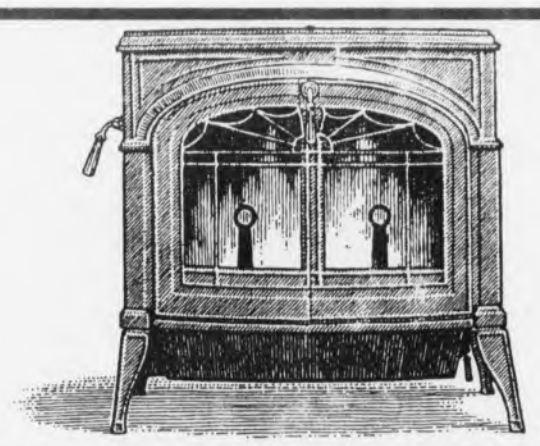
"Where do health boards get off having their own rules and regulations?" he said, "Where do they get the authority to have a meeting, look at a draft, vote it by majority and that's it — one night of discussion, provided it is published in the local newspaper in full and sent to the DEQE — Where do they get the authority for such a simple procedure to create powerful local environmental law and land use controls?"

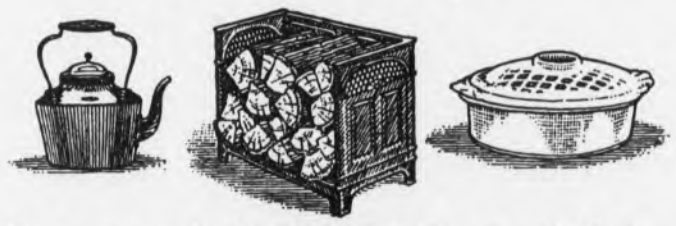
He answered, "They get it in the form of their own statutes, which authorize any reasonable health regulation.

"Now is there some rule in the statute that says, 'No town shall have more than three or four little, tiny sentences or paragraphs dealing with the whole range of health problems?'" he asked a silent audience. "No. Is there any statute that says boards of health can never make a new law more than once every five or six years? No, but that's the way it looks."

McGregor commented, "Boards of health are living in the last century. They haven't even begun to pick up the tools that are available for them to cope with the problems the public thinks they are dealing with.

"They are leaving these tools on the ground, rusting," he said. "And the tools have been on the ground for the past several decades.





"The heyday of the health board," McGregor said, "was in the 1950s, when we needed our water supplies chlorinated, when we needed stiff rules on cross-connections, when it really made a difference if markets and restaurants had clean habits followed by their employees.

"Since then," he added, "it looks like boards of health are light years behind the planning boards, zoning boards and conservation commissions, in getting their own laws on the books and enforcing those laws in a business-like way.

"I'm making that editorial comment," McGregor said, "because I see that in practice every day of the week. Recently, I heard a board of health say, 'We don't need regulations because we make policies. We don't want any package treatment plants in this town; we won't let you have any permits. That's just the way it is.

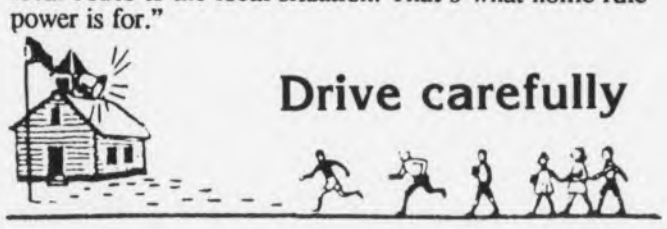
"'We don't need any regulations. It's a policy. No, it doesn't have to be written down...'

"Blatantly illegal!" McGregor said.

"I saw another health board in one town that could not quote Title 5 on what is the four-foot groundwater elevation."

McGregor said one would have a hard time finding a booklet written by the conservation law foundation at a health board office, despite the fact they were freely distributed. "It would be even harder to find a member who has read it," he said.

"As a result, we find that health board members are woefully ignorant of what their powers are, and for that reason, often react wrongly by requests by the public to help with a contaminated well, to issue an order against another agency in town, such as the DPW, or to write a set of rules to cover landfills in town.



"It is time to bring boards of health into the 1980s," he said.

To the coalition representatives and to audience members, many of whom were health board members or health agents, McGregor distributed a booklet of sample health board regulations adopted under home rule authority.

"This is my small contribution," he noted. "If you distribute regulations on say, hazardous waste site cleanups, you will get boards thinking, 'Hey, you mean we don't have to wait for the DEQE and the EPA on the superfund? We're not at the mercy of these agencies for these little sites that never get to the superfund list?

He urged the health board members present to look over the samples and consider action.

"The DEQE is frank to say that Title 5 is a statewide minimum," McGregor said, "a sort of generic code. So, while not welcoming it with open arms, the DEQE will acknowledge that the local board of health can tailor local codes to the local situation. That's what home rule power is for."

Incinerator support

The South Shore Coalition decided Thursday to back Weymouth Braintree and Quincy opposition to a proposed Clean Harbors incinerator in Braintree.

"This could conceivably be the biggest hazardous waste incinerator on the east coast," said Weymouth Selectman Brian McDonald. "Weymouth, Braintree and Quincy are fairly strongly united in opposition to the construction of that facility."

McDonald said opposition is based largely on the fact hat there are more than 30,000 people living within a half-mile radius of the incinerator site on the banks of the Fore River.

"It is set down in the valley, a topographical depression," he noted, "and with the height of the stack, those emissions would be blowing into neighboring towns. Residents in Braintree, Weymouth and Quincy are at eye level with it."

McDonald added, "While the Fore River is not the prettiest river, it is still part of the food chain."

Mike Almada, a Marshfield town planner agreed that because of the "population density factor," the South Shore Coalition should be opposed to siting the incinerator in Braintree.

"There are no state guidelines that enable us to distinguish what is a good site and what is a bad site," he said.

Gregor McGregor, who has been hired by Braintree as environmental counsel, added that "many people believe the state should not be siting these facilities until reform legislation is enacted.

The legislation, he explained, would adopt siting standards into the statute.

He explained that the new standards would force the siting council to take a more active planning role, picking sites and matching them with companies.

"Take advantage of comment opportunities," he said, "and push for a proactive, rather than reactive hazardous waste siting program."

☐ The Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers presented two scholarships at the award ceremonies for high school seniors in June.

Elizabeth Wilson, 17, from Scituate received a $1,000 scholarship. Elizabeth, daughter of Lemand F. and Helen H. Wilson, plans to attend Villanova University majoring in business. Elizabeth was on the honor roll four times, a candidate for N.H.S. and a staff member of the Scituate High School newspaper and yearbook.

Nichole Prisble, 18, was the Cohasset High School recipient of a $1,000 scholarship. Nichole plans to attend Northwestern University in Evanston, Illinois, majoring in Liberal Arts. She is the daughter of Dan and Yvonne Prisble of Cohasset. Nichole was a National Merit finalist, worked on the high school yearbook and managed girls' basketball and softball.

The Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers Club also wishes to acknowledge and thank the many merchants who so willingly donated gifts which were raffled at the Spring Fashion Show held at Barkers Tavern. Dedication and hard work of the Newcomers and the support received from the community made these awards possible again this year.

☐ There certainly was a celebration on Doane Street recently, and for a dandy reason! The party was held at the home of Mark and Nancy Connelly, and it was to welcome back Morelia and Guillermo Candia, who just returned from Chile. Tony and Edna Finegan, Bob and Agnes Skorupa, Judy Fitzsimmons, Laila Roujonakis, and Olive Mullen were all there to take part in the festivities, as were all the children. We gladly add our names to those who are glad to have the Candia family home!!

☐ Laura Matteson, granddaughter of Dr. and Mrs. William Matteson and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Matteson (of West Hartford, Conn.), has just completed a concert tour of China with the Hartford Youth Orchestra. Laura plays the oboe, and must do a super job in order to make a tour like that. Imagine touring China. . . .

Connie MacCausland demonstrates flower arranging during this week's Community Garden Club luncheon. (Eileen Picariello)

☐ The second Congregational Church has a most worthy project underway, to benefit the final phases of the Mary/Martha Learning Center (this is a place for young mothers to learn some new skills to begin again). They are selling raffle tickets for a beautiful patchwork quilt that was made by Phyllis Peck. Nifty idea!

☐ As you have undoubtedly noticed, the tent is down at the South Shore Music Circus! Farewell to summer, and here's hoping for a wonderful fall.

☐ Cannot believe that it's that time again, but the fact is that Mary Jeanette Murray's term as State Rep. is almost over and she is up for re-election! She certainly has done a super job, with honors and duties performed too numerous to list in the space given! Sept. 27 is a day to put aside in her honor, when they will again hold a fundraiser brunch. It will be held at the South Shore Country Club from 11:30 to 1:30. This is a "two-fer", you show your support for our State Rep. (Mary Jeanette is serving her sixth term) and get to partake in a delectible brunch! Tickets are available by contacting Lillian Murray (Chairman) at 383-1000.

☐ We hear that John Reidy is doing real well at college, which is no surprise. "John the Graduate" will always be a superior guy, and we miss him.

☐ There certainly was a nice article in the Quincy Patriot Ledger about Walt Sweeney last week. Isn't it great to see someone so willing to teach others through his mistakes? Walt and his wife Nanci will be in town at the end of the month, be sure to tell him how proud you are of him!!

☐ This story is a hard one to believe, but it's true. Who would think that anyone would be mean enough to steal the flags from the Veteran's Memorial Park? Well, the American Flag and the Missing in Action Flag have been stolen this time! As you may or may not know, many of the flags are donated by families to honor their loved ones and all of the war veterans. Whoever you are, please just return the flags to the George H. Mealey Post and there will be no questions asked.

☐ Cynthia (Lytle) Responde was in town recently. As many of you may remember, Cynthia and her family lived on Linden Drive for many years. She reports that all is well with her family: Guy is a lawyer now, Amie is working for a publishing house and Gwen is a student in college! Can't you still see the three little ones running up and down Linden Drive? Well. . . .

☐ Glad to report that G. Warren Bates is home and recovering very nicely, and certainly grateful for all of the cards and thoughts that he received.

☐ Is there anything that those Bates girls cannot do? After seeing the pictures of Rebecca trying her hand at the carillons in St. Stephen's Church last week, we don't think so!! They must all take after their mom, Dorothy Bates! She does it all and then some. . . .

☐ Finally, don't forget to support the athletes in our town this fall. Whatever sport you like, they play it at some point during the week! They practice hard to make an enjoyable game for you, and their spirit is sure to make you want to go again . . . back their efforts, and be there to root them on.

☐ Let us know your news!

School committee to look hard at field article

The school committee began to take a long hard look at the proposed major renovations to Lillard field at their meeting on Monday. Four articles in the upcoming town meeting will be dedicated to the complete revamping of the field directly behind the High School making it the center of activity for football, soccer, and field hockey.

The proposed varsity playing field would come complete with a fence surrounding it, a vehicular access and stairs leading up from the school. The stairs would be installed because the present slope will take on a higher grade after the construction of the field. Plans show the field surrounded by a full length track as well as a long jump area.

The committee working on this project has submitted the plan in four parts for the approval of town meeting voters. The first article is only concerned with the complete renovation of Lillard field. The second article is to install an all weather polyurethane track.The third article will ask for the purchase of bleachers to be installed on the hill behind Lillard field down from the water tower. The bleachers will have a capacity of 800 to 1000 people. The fourth article on the warrant will address the need to light the new field for the possibility of having night games.

"The enrollment may be down," said Ken Ekberg of the committee, "but the numbers of participants are up considerably."

Since 1975, four additional teams, 3 girls soccer teams and a Jr. High soccer team, have been added to the program.

"There is no doubt about the need for this with the growth of the soccer program and the gaining popularity of fitness in town," said Diana Kornet of the school committee. Kornet also added that it might be of a greater advantage to the school system to have the main playing field on school land as opposed to Milliken field which is town owned land.

"I think it is unfortunate that this was not done 10 or 15 years ago," said Superintendent Steve Hart.

According to Ekberg some of the advantages for the new field include the proximity to the High School for storage and use of restrooms; also the importance of separating track and baseball in the spring when long fly balls can disrupt the concentration of even the best pole vaulter.

The fact that the additional revenues from night games might pay for the installation of lighting in a very short time was also brought up. Night games are now very common in surrounding towns because of the potential for greater attendance as well as the improved scheduling capabilities.

The committee for the renovation of Lillard field includes Ekberg as well as Clark Chatterton, Peter Laugelle, Charles DeSantis, and Terri Duggan. The committee has presented town voters with plans for a first class athletic facility.

A great observance

Celebrating the 200th signing of the U.S. Constitution was important to the town of Cohasset. Although we had no immediate connections to the delegates at that Philadelphia convention, the resulting document has greatly affected our lives.

We were one of the first towns on the South Shore to be designated an official Constitution Bicentennial community. And from all accounts, the events planned last week by our commission were among the most impressive in this area. As commission chairman David Wadsworth noted, "Cohasser has marked Constitution Day as well or better than other towns on the South Shore."

This noteworthy fact was made possible through the efforts of seven members of our local commission, including Wadsworth, David Chittim, Barbara Dillon, Patricia Murphy, Michelle Buckley, Frank Smith and Maxwell Pounder. Since last fall, they have met regularly and worked diligently to ensure a meaningful and significant celebration of this important event.

To anyone who attended the 8:30 a.m. flagraising at the common last Thursday, it was clearly apparent that Constitution Day in Cohasset was an important event. The hundreds of school children who attended, the senior citizens who sang along, and the toddlers who watched in awed silence, realized this was a special time - a day to remember.

The skies were bright blue, and underneath the towering flagpole stood the schoolchildren, clad in vibrant shades of red, white and blue. They stood proudly and attentively while the ceremonies continued.

There were brief speeches by local dignataries. But what will be remembered most are the songs we sang together. In the warm autumn morning, we stood together in proud tribute to our country and our heritage. And side by side, with some help from the children of our community, we sang the songs we learned long ago in the classrooms of Cohasset and in many other distant communities.

It was a glorious day, Sept. 17. Perhaps it will never happen again. But for that one brief time, we stopped for a moment. We forgot the work that had to be finished at home or at work. We stood side by side, some holding hands and all with their heads held proud. We sang together and it felt good.

For at least one day, we made our thanks to those who paved the way for the world we enjoy today. And we did it in all sincerity. It was a great day in Cohasset.

As chairman Wadsworth observed at another ceremony later that day, the significance of the Constitution should not be forgotten after this celebration. Its fundamental importance in our daily lives must be nurtured by all residents of this country. It is the basis of our freedoms and that is something that nust be cared for. It should never be allowed to fade rom our memories.

Following last week's celebration, that responsibility has been made clear.

Celebration of a living document

by Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray
Special to the Mariner

This month, on the 17th of September, we celebrated the 200th anniversary of the Constitution of the United States. It is a celebration of a piece of literature that is truly a "living" document.

The U.S. Constitution enjoys the double distinction of being the world's first written constitution and its oldest. But this is more than a document that has endured, it's one that has adapted itself to the changing conditions of the Nation and its people. At the constitutional convention in Philadelphia in 1787, James Madison argued that "in framing a system which we wish to last for ages, we should not lose sight of the changes which ages will produce."

The Constitution, again described by Madison, is "the cement of the Union." It is that, and more. Say aloud the words of the Preamble to the Constitution and you can sense the power and imagination that sparked the forging of a great country.

"We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish the Constitution for the United States of America."

In 1879 British Prime Minister William Gladstone described the Constitution as "the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man."

This great document is primarily a work of the imagination. It imagined a country. And it imagined a country full of people imagining themselves. Within the articles and stipulations of the Constitution, the framers of this document gave us not only the room to fly, but the implied encouragement to fly. "We the people. . .", the words ring across the centuries and around the Earth. The document, as described by Abraham Lincoln in 1856, is "the only safeguard of our liberties."

Our Constitution, "We the people. . .," is the sacred blueprint for this country and the future of its people. The bicentennial of the Constitution is one celebration we should all observe, for we all have much to be thankful for because of this inspired document and the dreamers who wrote it.

Cohasset Constitution group says thanks

To the editor:

On behalf of the Cohasset Constitutional Bicentennial Committee I would like to extend sincere thanks to the Mariner newspaper for printing the several articles over the past nine months relating to the Constitutional Bicentennial.

It is our belief that the Cohasset Mariner has been instrumental in helping us to "get across" the message of the importance and significance of the American Constitution, to the citizens of our community.

The national Bicentennial observance is scheduled to continue through 1991 to include the anniversary of ratification and of the ratification of the first 10 amendments, the "Bill of Rights". The Cohasset Bicentennial Committee expects to continue its activity through the duration of the national observance, and may, from time to time, sponsor occasional articles relating thereto.

Again, for the members of the Cohasset Bicentennial Committee, may I extend our appreciation for the Mariner's help and cooperation in presenting the Committee's articles and for your coverage of the town's Bicentennial activities.

Summer museum inventory uncovers art

by David Wadsworth
Special to the Mariner

Recently while making an inventory of the extensive museum collections of the Cohasset Historical Society two museum workers chanced upon an old and uniquely unusual item, long resting unrecognized among early historical artifacts relating to the history of the town. As the result of the summer's inventory project the item's identity has become known.

Of the numerous artifacts, artworks and documents in the Historical Society's museum collections, each carefully preserved item has its own particular story to tell and each fills a niche in the record of this small New England town and its people. Coming to light during the recent summer was a small dimly visible framed picture done in simple primitive style showing several houses, clumps of trees and some people in a small boat upon an inlet of water, all set on or around a grassy knoll.

The picture carried the identifying legend "Cohasset Common done by 11 year old Betsey Turner at Derby Academy, Hingham in 1796." A careful cleaning of the protecting glass surface to remove obscuring dust showed, to the delight of the museum workers, that the small but ancient work was an example of a child's accomplishment in needlework.

Emerging from beneath the obscuring material was a cameo scene in bright colors, showing two Georgian style buildings (one possibility being the 1747 Meeting House on the Common), several large trees, a small boat carrying seven men floating on an arm of Little Harbor, and an old hay wagon, all being overviewed by a well-dressed gentlemen carrying a walking stick. The inlet of water seems to lap at the base of a low grassy knoll just as Little Harbor reaches toward the Common's northeastern edge. All this was done in needlework upon a background of silk.

Not many days following the discovery of this delightful little scene of early Cohasset, the Society's facilities were visited by a specialist in the field of early

Uncovered artifact

American needlework. Here, an immediate identification of the small work was made, and its actual origin was described in detail. Scrutiny of the details and style of the miniature picture identified it as being needlework done at Derby School between the years 1796 and 1804, by a child taught the art of needlework by the second headmistress of the school. Hingham's Derby Academy, incorporated in 1784 as Derby School, began its existence as a school for the young children of the town's north Parish and selected children from other nearby areas. Established by conveyance of land and bequest of funds by the widow Sarah Derby of Hingham, the school sought to fill an educational need within its small community. On April 5, 1791 Derby School held its first classes, under the first Preceptor Abner Lincoln and Preceptress Lucy Lane.

In June of 1796 the office of Preceptress changed hands and the second Preceptress was Elizabeth Dawes. It was she who headed the female classes of Derby School when Betsey Turner learned the art of stitchery or needlework. Curriculum for the boys of Derby included four languages, Mathematics and Geography. For the girls it was English, French, Arithmetic and "the art of needlework in general." Among founding provisions for the school was one that stated it must "elect and appoint a sensible, discreet woman skilled in the art of needlework."

In the small needlework by Betsey Turner the key to its age is the form and style of the large trees, which show a color-banded design. Derby's first teacher of needlework had taught a very different style of foliage, and the design used by Betsey Turner had been characteristic of her successor.

The name of Turner has its early roots in the town of Scituate, and it was there that Betsey Turner was born on March 6, 1784. Her parents were Job and Abiah Turner. The Turners moved to Cohasset to reside, and in 1810 Job Turner purchased the fine Federal house on the Common's east edge built in 1794 by the Rev. Josiah Crocker Shaw. Job had served as Town Treasurer in 1803, was "Shipowner" (one of Cohasset's earlier), and a part owner in the tidal grist mill at the entrance to the Gulf at Cohasset Harbor built by Elisha Doane in 1792.

As for the cameo needlework made in 1796 by Betsey Turner, the small scene rests within a simple wood frame, fronted by wavy antique glass, attached by thread to a thin wooden backing, and protected on the back by a rough, course sheet of paper described as "late 18th century rag paper." These things may be original with the needlework. The discovery of the true identity of the Derby School needlework has added to the story of Cohasset's long and fascinating history, and fills yet another niche in the record of this early town and its people.

It is the collected artifacts, artworks and documents of early Cohasset which, together, tell the story of an earlier American adventure here on the shores of New England.

TRANSPORTATION
Senior Shuttle Schedule

Transportation for Cohasset residents is a top priority for the Council on Aging. All seniors wishing to use the Senior Shuttle must call the Senior Center (383-9112) to reserve a seat. This will apply to all trips (Sunday Church) Monday through Friday. It is suggested that you call at least one day ahead before you wish to use the van. Last minute calls will be accepted (space available) till 9 a.m. the day of the trip. We ask that passengers use the van for grocery shopping two times a week and that bundles be limited to two or three per passenger.

Anyone not currently using the Senior Shuttle is encouraged to call for this service. Door to door service is provided by volunteer drivers twice a day.

TRANSPORTATION FOR DISABLED RESIDENTS

Good news for our disabled residents with transportation problems. The Scituate, Norwell and Cohasset Councils on Aging have formed a (SSTC) South Shore Transportation Consortium for the purpose of providing a specialized transportation to all disabled residents of the three towns. This consortium was awarded a special grant under the Executive Office of Elder Affairs Discretionary Funds $13,300 to provide transportation to disabled people of all ages for medical, social, and recreational purposes . . . just what we've been hoping for in the South Shore area where transportation is one of our biggest problems to begin with. This service will be available as of September 15.

Volunteers are needed for answering phones and serving as escorts on the specially equipped vans. If you need help with transportation or would like to volunteer one morning a week, please call Kathy Bryanton between 8:30 and 3:30 Monday through Friday at 383-9112.

Townspeople share in Constitution tribute

The commission chairman gave credit to the seven members of the local committee, particularly secretary David Chittim. "He did a lot of the planning, especially regarding our dedication of the park," Wadsworth explained. "He worked very closely with the town departments and with Executive Secretary Donald Andrew, Selectman Burt Pratt and Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray. A lot of people were involved in the planning, and I think it showed. Everything went very well."

The day's observance began at 8:30 a.m. on the town common. Hundreds of Deer Hill students, their teachers, and parents attended the morning ceremonies in which the official U.S. Consitution Bicentennial flag was raised atop the flagpole.

Barbara Dillon, a member of the Constitution commission and the Lothrop Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, presented the flag to selectmen. The flag, which had flown over Congress in Washington, D.C., was hoisted atop the pole by Tree and Park Department employees Herbert Marsh and his son, Herbert Marsh Jr.

With that accomplished, bugler Sarah Bishop sounded the colors.

Commission member Chittim told the audience they once anticipated "that ten people would be here. It's gladdening to see so many here today," he observed. The audience which circled the common then sang along with the high school senior chorus to a medley of patriotic songs. The sixth grade fife and drum corps then performed for the appreciative crowd of senior citizens, mothers and small children.

The morning ceremony concluded with a rendition of America. "This is a great way to start the day," Chittim remarked.

At noon, a crowd of residents walked to the small corner park on Ripley Road, which intersects the area between the post office and the community center. In honor of the Bicentennial, the park was officially dedicated "Constitution Park."

A plaque, which was donated by the Lee Parmenter family in memory of their parents, will be placed on a boulder at the park and inscribed with the words, "Constitution Park, dedicated Sept. 17, 1987."

Wadsworth welcomed the residents to the ceremony, and noted that Cohasset was the first community on the South Shore to be official designated a Bicentennial community by the national commission.

"As part of our observance, this park is being dedicated," he stated, "to honor the living document signed Sept. 17, 1787 which is a cornerstone of our nation and a keystone of our freedom."

The greatest reponsibility is therefore invested in the citizens of this nation, he explained. Every person is now responsible for the careful nurturing of the democracy created by this document, with a "willingness to preserve those freedoms. Our strongest asset is our people," he stated - those citizens who must seek the preservation of this democracy for years to come.

Selectman Burt Pratt then spoke to the 40 residents who attended the noontime ceremony. He said he was pleased the local commission chose that particular site for the park dedication. Living just up the road, "I crossed this path many times as a young boy on the way to school and as a young man going to work," he stated.

The property, Pratt explained, made its greatest contribution to the community as a livery stable. Tracing back its history, the selectman said the Tilden family built a stable big enough for 50 horses and included an elevator. It was eventually torn down - a victim of the age of autos.

The Cohasset Improvement Association acquired the land, cleaned it and donated it to the town . And when Pratt was ten years old, he was hired to "take a stick with a nail in it and pick up the litter once a day and bring it to the incinerator located across the street. Each Saturday, I received a crisp $1 bill," he recalled.

But this is a new era, Pratt said. "I thank the commission members for the concept, the planning and the hard work, and I acknowledge the selectmen, the executive secretary, Peter Laugelle and crew, Harold Litchfield, the Community Garden Club and the Amateur Garden Club, Wayne Sawchuk and Lee Parmenter and his sisters and all others for the invaluable contributions."

The two local garden clubs provided mulch and rhododendrum trees which they planted alongside the boulder at the park. The town's highway and tree and park departments worked many hours cleaning the park of debris and dead trees. Many people attending last week's ceremony remarked at how large the park looked with the removal of the excess foliage.

In addition to the morning events, the Deer Hill School featured a special cake celebration later that afternoon. And although it was originally planned as a special outdoor concert on the common, a band concert featuring the South Shore Concert Band, was held in the high school auditorium that evening.

As commission chairman Wadsworth stated last week, "Cohasset has marked Constitution Day as well or better than other towns on the South Shore."

AIDS forum scheduled Oct. 4

scheduled to participate in the forum.

Following the discussion, there will be time scheduled for a question and answer period. Hansen explained that in Newton, in order to protect the confidentiality of the audience, all questions were written on cards and passed forward to the panelists.

Hansen noted that the state Department of Public Health has called on local health agencies to present an educational program to their communities. "There is a need to provide information to all residents, and this is exactly how they would like that information disseminated," she stated.

"AIDS is on the rise, which is a horrible statistic since this is a disease we can avoid," she said. "We can only contract the disease through dirty needles and sexual activity and no one can be forced into any one of those things."

Hansen explained that AIDS is a fragile virus that can not live outside the human body. But once the infected body fluids get into the blood stream, the virus is transmitted. "We can not get the AIDS virus any other way. So the fear of using public restrooms should not be of concern to us."

The Social Service League, one sponsor of this educational program, has had a long tradition of bringing health-related issues before the public. Previous seminars and discussions centered on the issues of widowhood, grieving, drug and alcohol awareness, nutrition, and financial planning for women. In past years, the League has sponsored programs regarding a wide range of women's health issues. "Typically, the Social Service League has responded to whatever concerns the general public," she stated.

The League is a voluntary agency which recently celebrated its 75th anniversary. The public health nurse is a part of the on-going services provided by the organization. "The League is concerned with the health and wellness of the community, the prevention of illness and the maintenance of good health," she said. "AIDS is a concern to us now because the number of cases are increasing. There is no vaccine, no cure. And all studies indicate the disease will be spread by the teens of today, the college students of tomorrow.

"We feel it is the responsibility of the public health department to help people avoid the high risk behavior that may result in this disease. We will call attention to this problem and hope somebody pays attention. I'm certain, simply by the topic of discussion, there'll be a certain percentage who will turn their backs."

She continued, "we're not saying there's an epidemic in Cohasset. But this is the purpose of all public health agencies - to take the initiative from the state and the nation and to begin to educate its residents."

The public health nurse stressed that the discussion will be aimed toward parents and their young teenagers. Junior high and senior high students are urged to attend the seminar, along with their parents.

For more information about the Oct. 4 seminar, contact the Social Service League at 383-0771.

Bluefish tourney winners announced

After tallying over 830 pounds of bluefish the winners of Trask Tackle Company's Bigfish Bluefish Tournament were announced by Tournament Official Janet Trask on Labor Day.

Competition was keen as contestants kept the scale swinging with hundreds of entries, vying for weekly prizes, while in pursuit of the elusive twenty pounders. Mark Trask reported that the average fish weights this year were about 2 - 3 pounds less than in 1986.

The mood was festive as the winners gathered at the North Scituate shop for awards and photos. Final standings were as follows:

Boat Division

First Place, Joe McCool of Cohasset with a sixteen pound, eight ounce fish caught on a redhead Rapala lure.

Second Place, Paul Figueredo of Cohasset with a sixteen pound, two ounce fish caught on a Gibbs popper.

Third Place, 1986 defending champ Teddy Abbadessa of Cohasset with a fifteen pound, thirteen ounce fish caught on a live pogie.

Shore Division

First Place, Bob D'Angelo of Hull with a fifteen pound, eight ounce fish caught on a mackeral chunk.

Second Place, Ken Hennebury of Hull with a fourteen pound, four ounce fish caught on a pogie chunk.

Third Place, Ralph Lovejoy of Scituate with a thirteen pound fish caught on a mackeral chunk.

Soccer team evens record with win

by Peter Kasperowicz
Mariner correspondent

C.H.S.'s varsity soccer team came up a winner last Thursday as it defeated Abington 5-0, making them two-for-two this season. Cohasset went into the game feeling confident of victory, but by the end of the first half they realized that Abington would be no pushover.

The goalies stood virtually unmolested during the first half, as both teams possessed a strong defense. Senior Adam Durant, along with the rest of the team, was impressed at how intensely Abington fought for the ball.

"We were told that they wouldn't be that tough. They're a younger team, but they're not that bad," Durant said.

Coach Dan Magner had to deal with his players' frustration at Abington's seemingly impenetrable defense. The first half ended with a score of 0-0.

What seemed easy at first was suddenly difficult.

During the half, Magner explained why Cohasset wasn't on top.

"If I had to guess, I'd say that Abington is winning the ball 20 times more often than Cohasset is. There is no doubt in my mind that we can beat them; and the only reason it's 0-0 is because, in a fifty-fifty situation, Cohasset just isn't winning the ball enough."

Whether it was the rain that began ten minutes into the second half or Coach Magner's words, Cohasset began to win the ball. Just as it began to get slippery, Jay Marsac putCohasset on the board with help from Jimmy Reidy. From then on, Cohasset held the ball consistently enough to score on four more occasions. Scorers included: Ian Smart (unassisted), David Shultz with an assist from Danny Pompeo, Todd Fitzpatrick with an assist from Joel Reidy (it might be noted that Reidy is the goalie!), and Pompeo with an assist from Travis Coley.

What seemed difficult suddenly seemed simple. "It was a great second half. We won the ball, controlled it. You have to do that before you can score," Magner said at the end.

Kerygma Bible Study finishes

The Kerygma Bible Study Class reconvenes on Tuesday, Sept. 29 at 8 p.m. Our topic for the evening will be "Wisdom in New Testament Literature." The class which began meeting last year will finish its course on December 8.

Course on family

A four-session course on the Fundamentals of Faith and Family will begin on Sunday, Sept. 27, at 2:30 p.m. Members of the Adult Education Committee will be telephoning you to tell you more about it. Whatever stage our families are in, whether we are single or a couple, have young children or aging parents, our faith and faith community can assist us with the joys and challenges that are part of our life together.

We hope in this course to explore the fundamental teachings of our faith that are pertinent to today's families, to build our church community through sharing the jobs and hopes we experience in our families, and to discover how we can grow to better live out our faith in our family situations. Don't miss this helpful course on faith and our families.

Outreach notes

The Outreach Committee recently learned of a Teen Mothers Program in Scituate. The South Shore Educational Collaborative began its program for pregnant and parenting teens on April 8, 1987. The program, open to 22 communities on the South Shore, provides an opportunity for young women to complete their education, to learn parenting skills, and to explore career possibilities and job placement. Girls are helped to find training and/or entry-level positions after graduating from the program.

We have invited the director of this program, Elizabeth S. Hawes, Ed.M. to tell us about the program on Sunday, Oct. 4, following coffee hour, in the choir room. All interested parishioners are invited to attend.

Our "Linked" Ethiopian Child

Last fall the Vestry voted to contribute one half of our village fair funds to the Anglican Child Care Fund established by the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief for Ethiopian orphans. Through an Anglican church program these children are being raised in a Christian environment and taught skills that will benefit them in the future.

In February we sent them a gift of $2,250 requesting that $540 of this be used for the sponsorship of an Ethiopian orphan for one year.

We recently received information about "our" child, Afera Kiros, along with his picture. We may not communicate directly with him, but the Presiding Bishop's Funds office will answer any questions we may have about him. It is the hope of the Fund that we will continue to sponsor him until he is 18.

Junior Choirs beginning music

Children ages 4 through first grade are invited to be part of a Beginning Music Activity each Monday in the Choir Room from 3:15 p.m. to 3:45 p.m., followed by a snack time in Walton Rodgers Hall. The program will include movement and will encourage the children to express their natural rhythm. They may be accompanied by autoharp and guitar as well as piano.

Children in second grade and up will rehearse each Monday in the Choir Room from 3:45 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. The rehearsal will be preceded by a snack time in Walton Rodgers Hall beginning at 3:15 p.m. This program will explore training the participants to read music through enoyable activities. They may be accompanied by a variety of instruments. As there is a wide age and ability range, each will be presented with appropriate challenges.

Both Choirs will be under the direction of Ann Whiteley. As well as being an organist, Ann was a Primary and Junior Music Specialist in elementary schools in Canada, and a parent volunteer teaching music to 3-year olds in California. Her experience includes directly musicals for children in grades 3 to 6 and singing in various church, community and symphony choirs. She and her husband Gordon have two children ages 4 and 7.

Auditions and prior musical training are not required. Children need only exhibit a willingness to participate. The choirs will take part in various church services throughout the year.

Financial planning

Cohasset Savings Bank is cooperating with Cohasset High School in providing a "hands-on" approach to teaching high school students how to handle details of their financial affairs.

Now in its third consecutive year, the Bank's consumer education program for students entitled "Your Checking Account" is being used in Business Mathematics where money management is an important part of the curriculum.

The basis of the program is a kit of teaching materials that includes a supply of checks, deposit slips, bank statements and related reference material.

CHURCH SCHOOL — Greetings to all! I hope your summer vacation was terrific. I'm eager to see everyone again to share experiences. Here are two dates that parents should keep in mind: SUNDAY, SEPT. 20, IS RALLY DAY. "Darvo," the gospel clown, will be with us to help get our Sunday School year off to a fun start. SUNDAY, SEPT. 27, will begin regular classes. More information in next "Village Beacon." Also, there will be an orientation — meeting/coffee for teachers and Christian Education Board members on Monday, Sept. 14, at 7:30 p.m. in Bates Hall.

VOLUNTEERS NEEDED! — Please help make our annual service for elders and special needs adults a big success. We need volunteers to make phone calls, make sandwiches, serve lunch and help with transportation. Any offer is greatly appreciated. Call Kathy Bryanton 383-9112 or Catherine Watson 659-7878. CHURCH FAMILY REUNION

Octoberfest, Oct. 4, Outdoor revival, 10:30 a.m.; Fun and picnic, 11:30 a.m. - 2 p.m.

Oct. 4, an outdoor church service will be held on the lawn behind the Jack Martins'. The service will be in the fashion of an outdoor revival and will include the singing of many "old favorites."

Immediately following the service, we will be able to enjoy each other's company through participation in games of horseshoes, volleyball and various relays.

The Music Man will be on hand to entertain us with sing-alongs and group dances.

Everyone will be asked to bring a salad or a dessert in order to provide a "smorgasbord" for us all to feast on. The sausages and hot dogs will be provided and prepared by a few First Parish Master Chefs.

Please attend! Meet the people that are First Parish. It will be an opportunity to make new friends and renew old friendships. The yearly calendar will be available and you'll be on hand to hear of all the activities planned at First Parish in the coming year.

Mark your calendar — OCTOBER 4.

PARENT DISCUSSION GROUP

FRIDAY, SEPT. 18, 6:30 - 8 p.m., IN THE PARISH HOUSE.

Anyone interested in a parent discussion group is invited to attend and help decide when, where, how, format, content, etc. This meeting will be informal — pizza and drinks will be served, kids are welcome. The idea is to do the planning and organizational work required to have this type of group during the year. Any questions — call Debbie Eaton, 383-6065.

Hope to see you there!

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION NEWS:

GREETINGS! I hope everyone enjoyed the summer as much as I did!

The opening of the church school program will begin on September 20 at 10:30 a.m. in the Parish House. Registrations will be accepted that day before and after the service.

Parents will soon be receiving the 1987-88 prospectus that outlines our program and curriculum for the coming year.

The focus of this year's program will be special events and celebrations that incorporate the arts with spiritual values. I believe that the integration of worship, knowledge and beauty is a significant factor in developing a culturally sensitive individual. It is also an excellent tool to convey the less tangible aspects of mystery and wonder.

Our special events will include dance, music, storytelling and the creation of a ceramic mural for Trueblood Hall.

We plan to make this year an exciting and happy one for the youngsters. We ask your cooperation and to help out in whatever ways you can. — Chris.

MUSIC NOTES

Rehearsals begin now, every Wednesday at 8 p.m. (anyone who comes at 7:45 gets extra help!) We sing every Sunday, but diplomatic shuttles and broken bones are taken into consideration. Come join us.

Bell Ringers will begin officially in October if we can stand to wait that long.

Choir 9:30 a.m. Sunday and 8:00 p.m. Wednesday, September 16.

LDS sermon on Sabbath Day

A member of the High Council of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Dan Garrison of Hingham, has been invited to speak on Sunday Sept. 27 at the 9 a.m. Sacrament meeting at the LDS chapel, 379 Gardner St. in Hingham.

Bro. Garrison's topic will be: Keeping the Sabbath day Holy. He will be accompanied by youth speaker, Michele Howe of Pembroke.

Bible study and classes for all age groups follow until noon. The public is welcome.

LDS Women's Conference

The annual General Women's Conference of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will be meeting this Sat. at 8 p.m. at the meetinghouse at 379 Gardner St. in Hingham. Mormon women and friends will convene from the greater South Shore area to attend the conference which will be broadcast via satellite from Salt Lake City to over 1000 Stake centers throughout the United States and Canada.

Barbara W. Winder, General President of the Relief Society (women's organization) states that the meeting is geared to "helping LDS women come unto Christ as they deal with various issues facing them." Whether the woman is single, married, divorced, widowed or a single parent, Gospel principles, Winder says, can help us find joy, whatever our circumstances.

Besides Sis. Winder other speakers will be her counselors Sis. Evans and Sis. Doxey. A member of the Council of Twelve will also address the gathering.

For further information call Polly Doggett 383-1847.

SSCOOT driver training

SSCOOT, South Shore Coordinated Transportation, Inc. has scheduled a third offering of the regional "Passenger Assistance Techniques" Training course. The training class is a part of SSCOOT's drivers/staff training program and is open on a space-available basis to interested persons.

"Participants receive excellent instruction in this day-long training" according to Lois Rumney, SSCOOT Staff person and administrator of the course. "Our primary instructor is a Department of Transportation trained teacher of personnel involved with assisting and transporting mobility-impaired persons. He is assisted by wheelchair users in his instruction.

Braintree Hospital will again host the PAT class, providing the class room, wheelchairs, and other equipment needed. SSCOOT vans will be used by class participants.

Previous courses have been attended, as required, by SSCOOT personnel and by other agencies' staff and individuals who work and/or live with mobility impaired persons. According to Mrs. Rumney "SSCOOT drivers are required to take this course as well as FIRST AID AND CPR classes." There is a class fee and participants are invited to eat lunch in the Braintree Hospital cafeteria.

For further information call Louis Rumney at the SSCOOT office, 878-0051.

Glades tour

Through the courtesy of the Association that owns and operates the site, members and friends of the Cohasset Historical Society will have a rare opportunity to tour "The Glades".

It is the isolated and storied private summer resort that looms on the horizon as one looks from Cohasset Harbor towards Minot's Ledge Lighthouse.

Familiar to boaters and bathers in Cohasset and Scituate, the large gray-shingled complex at the end of Strawberry Point has held a fascination for those who have long wondered what it is like close up and yet have respected the privacy of the residents.

Built originally as a hotel 140 years ago, the facility has for over a century been the summer residence of generations of prominent Boston families: Adams, Ames, Chapin, Homans, Hunnewell and others.

Now we will have the chance to learn its history on the site and satisfy our curiosity with tours of the buildings and grounds led by Robert Thorndike, the resident manager, who spoke at a Society meeting several years ago. Refreshments will be served.

Because of limited access, parking will be at the Bailey Causeway town parking lot in Minot, with shuttle buses to the Glades. In order to facilitate the tours we are scheduling the buses at 1, 2, and 3 p.m. and ask that you specify your choice. We will try to accomodate you.

Attendance will be limited to the first 200 so return your reservation with a check for $7.50 for each ticket to the Cohasset Historical Society promptly. Early deadline, Friday, Oct. 2.

Pack 38 Cub Scouts

Change in date for Pack 38 Cub Scout Pack meeting! All Cub Scouts and parents (not Tiger Cubs) will meet Tuesday, Sept. 29 from 7 to 8 p.m. at the Deer Hill School.

Newcomers Club meeting

The Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers is having a coffee at 10 a.m., Sept. 23, for new residents at the home of Nancy Ross, 150 Pond Street in Cohasset.

For information call Ethel at 545-7997 or Nancy at 383-0023.

Teenage suicide program

The Brockton Region of the Archdiocese of Boston, under the direction of Bishop Daniel Hart, will conduct a series of programs for young people and their parents on "Teenage Suicide" and "Teenage Self Esteem." There will be a program in each Vicariate in the Brockton Region followed by one central program late this fall.

Teenage suicide is one of the most urgent problems facing our society. The suicide rate has tripled in the last ten years, and it is four times higher than it was in 1955. Thirty-four percent of all suicides in Massachusetts in 1979 were by people aged 15 to 29 years!

The first of these programs will be conducted in the Quincy Vicariate at St. Albert's Church in Weymouth on October 8, 1987, beginning at 7:30 p.m. The speaker on that evening will be Bill Carr, coordinator of the Adolescent Emergency Service Unit at the South Shore Mental Health Center.

The programs will be directed toward parents and teenagers. All are welcome to participate in this unique series of presentations.

Future programs are scheduled as follows: Natick Vicariate, St. Mary's, Holliston, Oct. 18; Norwood Vicariate, St. Mary's, Dedham, Oct. 22; Plymouth Vicariate, Sacred Heart School, Kingston, Oct. 28; Brockton Vicariate, St. Edward's Church, Nov. 9.

Walk for Afghanistan

Cohasset residents are urged to participate in the Walk for Afghanistan, Sunday Oct. 18 in Boston.

Participants are asked to obtain a sponsor who will contribute a certain amount of money for each mile of the ten-mile course walked.

The money will be used by the Free Afghanistan Alliance in Cambridge to provide medical assistance, artificial limbs, clothing and food to the more than five million Afghan refugees. Among the wounded are many children, maimed when they picked up a Soviet bomb disguised as a toy, march organizers said.

Magazine drive begins

The Annual Magazine Drive will start Sept. 23 for Grades 7 and 8.

This is to start the funds for these class graduation expenses in Grade 12.

Your cooperation will be appreciated with renewal and new subscriptions.

Any further information, call Mrs. Bates at the High School.

Alternative School meetings

Weekly meetings for Alternative School students will be held on Wednesdays, period 2. I ask for your cooperation in allowing Alt students to attend these meetings. I will certainly reinforce that all work missed must be made up, in agreement with the classroom teacher. Please let me know if this inconveniences your plans in any way.

I welcome anyone who would like to attend (and participate in) the Alt school weekly meeting. One of my goals this year is to encourage all Alt students to broaden their experiences here at school, especially those who feel less a part of the school community. Your participation (Lord knows time is scarce) could make a difference. Thanks. Jack Buckley

Voke students must pass employability test

By Kelly Williams
Mariner correspondent

Students at the South Shore Vocational Technical High School will now have to take an employability test before they can graduate.

The school committee voted last week to adopt regulations requiring all students to be evaluated on their work skills annually at the end of each trimester and the first trimester for seniors.

It's rather firm but appropriate," Superintendent Clifford Easton said. "We expect their attitudes and work behavior to be at a high level before we give a diploma or a trade certificate."

Students will have to receive at least a rating of 2 on seven of eight employability objectives. Teachers will rate students on the objectives on a scale from 1 to 4: 1-always, 2-most of the time, 3-sometimes, needs improvement, 4-much improvement needed.

Students will also be evaluated on: 1-aptitude/interest, 2-attendance/punctuality, 3-verbal/written communications, 4-follows verbal/written instructions, 5-courteous/respectful, 6-work habits/attitudes, 7-basic math competency, and 8-safe/disiplined/efficient performance.

Easton told the committee that other schools already test students on their work skills.

"Most schools are doing it, but we've very rarely done it," he said.

The committee also voted to amend the student handbook rules dealing with D-grades in shop courses, and toughened the unexcused absence policy.

Students who now receive a D in their shop class will be put on automatic probation rather than failing the class and having to repeat the course.

And students now must limit their unexcused absences to nine days a year in a shop class, and nine days a year in an academic course. Credit for the year in the course will be dropped if a student misses more than the nine days in the class.

"If they were out on a job and they were out two to three weeks a year, if the absence was not verified, how long would they hold that job?" Easton noted.

Committee member James McDermott of Hanson said he was afraid the new policy would prevent parents from being able to take their children on vacations, or would force parents to pay a doctor's fee in order to get a note for the school.

"We're talking about teenagers. I think a note from their mother is sufficient," he said.

But guidance counselor John Kosco claimed the new policy would place the responsibility on the students and the parents.

"A parent won't be writing notes because Johnny wants to go fishing," Kosko said.

"I think the only ones who are going to have trouble with this are those who take the days off and the parents who condone it," Chairman Robert Molla added.

Committee votes to spend $ on addition

By Kelly Williams
Mariner correspondent

The regional school committee voted last week to spend $30,000 of a $90,697 reimbursement from the School Building Assistance Bureau to help pay architect's fees for proposed additions to the South Shore Vocational Technical High School Hanover campus.

The committee agreed to use $60,000 of the SBAB reimbursement to pay for a computer and two bus loans, and the rest to be spent to offset most of the $67,000 in architect's fees for conceptual plans in the first phase of the project.

By paying off some of the school's loans, the committee is hoping to reduce the assessments to towns and save over $4,000 on interest costs.

"It's killing two birds with one stone. We're reducing assessments over the year and reducing the architect's fees," Superintendent Clifford Easton told the committee.

The committee is hoping to complete the first phase of the project by the end of this year, so it will have plans to show to the member towns. The school will be seeking town meeting approval from the eight-member towns for funding of the project next spring.

The school is building the additions to accommodate students from the Abington campus since Abington will have to vacate its present facility. The completion date for the additions is set for 1990 when the second five-year lease runs out on the Abington campus.

According to Superintendent Clifford Easton, the reimbursement was the final payment from the SBAB for the first five-year lease of the Abington school building. The committee could not receive the SBAB funds until after this year's audit was completed, and the figure was not included in the budget because their exact amount had not been available.

Committee member John Doyle of Rockland said that towns are concerned about the project, which has been estimated at $10.5 million.

He said the cost to the towns, which would be based on enrollment figures, would be included in next year's assessments.

"I know my own town is already shaking its head," Doyle said. "My town is looking at a new $1 million police station and a highway barn."

But Cohasset representative David Chittim said the annual cost to the towns would be $250,000 and that the figure may be reduced further by reimbursements.

"You have to put it into perspective," he said. "It sounds a lot different than $10 million."

Leachate spill reported at CHL; tests conducted

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

A leachate spill at the embattled commercial landfill was reported to local officials shortly after it occurred last week.

Engineering tests conducted on the liquid refuse that overflowed the Cohasset Heights Ltd. tanks last week proved it contained no hazardous substances.

In a letter to the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE), CHL attorney William M. Connolly explained that the spill occurred because of a delay in the transportation of the leachate to a treatment facility in Bristol, Conn.

According to Atty. Connolly, "when the heavy rains of the last ten days began, CHL contacted Tonawanda Transport Service, Inc. to assist in the transport of leachate to Connecticut.

"On Tuesday morning of Sept. 22, the same Tonawanda truck was scheduled to pick up leachate at 6 a.m., the truck failed to show. The tanks, at capacity, began overflowing and continued to overflow until approximately 1 p.m. when our truck returned (from Bristol) and reloaded."

In an agreement signed by the landfill owners and the board of health, the leachate from CHL must be transported out of the landfill and deposited at a treatment facility. Previously, CHL had utilized the services of the Greater Lawrence Sanitary District, but that town recently decided to close the facility to all outside waste.

On the following morning, Sept. 23, the Tonawanda truck again failed to arrive. "Leachate overflowed from approximately 6 a.m. to 1 p.m. when it was again picked up by our tank truck, " Atty. Connolly stated in a letter to the board.

According to Health Agent Joseph Godzik, the leachate overflowed the holding tanks and poured 15 to 100 yards off the landfill site and into the swamp. GHR engineering tested the leachate in the swale and retention pond, and hazardous contamination proved negative, he said. The health board will receive copies of the leachate testing from GHR.

In the meantime, to prevent further spillage in the Mentally handicapped housing delay

The warrant for the Oct. 26 special town meeting will contain 27 articles, although at least one is expected to be withdrawn.

That article requests the transfer of 1.9 acres of school-controlled land to the housing authority. The land, situated off Pleasant Lane, is a proposed site for an intermediate care facility for mentally handicapped adults.

The school department controls about 25 acres of land which is bordered by Rte. 3A, Pleasant Lane, and Evergreen Lane. Percolation tests previously completed by the Department of Mental Health (DMH) were successful, although more recent tests to find a sufficient septic system reserve area failed state public health regulations.

According to Supt. Stephen Hart, DMH will have to wait until the spring to begin new tests. Until that time, plans for the residence will have to be delayed, he said.

The school committee will sponsor a second land article in the Oct. 26 warrant. Article 8, which was inserted in the warrant at the request of the conservation commission and the planning board, requests a swap of land between the school department and developer Paul Ferrini.

The developer requested the school department transfer a 6,518-foot piece of land off Evergreen Lane for use as an access road from his proposed residential development along Rte. 3A.

In exchange, the conservation commission and planning board proposed that Ferrini give back to the school department a 18,524 square foot parcel along Rte. 3A which is adjacent to the school department property.

The school committee will be meeting Oct. 5 with the conservation commission and the planning board to discuss the proposed land swap. At that meeting, the two boards will explain to the school committee why the land swap is being proposed.

Among the other articles being proposed at the special town meeting is a citizens' petition to rezone portions of Chief Justice Cushing Highway from highway business and light industrial to residential. The petition was signed by 149 residents, many from Fair Oaks Lane.

The articles requests that the area zoned "highway business" east of Rte. 3A and northwest of Pond Street, and a smalll triangle between Rte. 3A and King Street be rezoned "residence B." That is the same designation as adjacent residential land.

All businesses currently in the designated zoning areas will remain. The proposed bylaw change will not affect those businesses currently located along Rte. 3A., and the business zone to the south of Beechwood Street.

The petition also requests that the areas currently zoned light industry northwest off Sohier Street on both sides of Rte. 3A be rezoned "residence C."

AIDS seminar set for Oct. 7

A reminder: the Board of Health and the Social Service League of Cohasset are jointly sponsoring a panel discussion entitled, "AIDS Affects Us All." The discussion will be held Wednesday, Oct. 7 from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. at the town hall.

This first-of-its-kind South Shore seminar on AIDS is free and open to the public. Moderator for the event will be WBZ medical reporter, Jeanne Blake.

The panelists will include Jeff Epperly, health educator for the AIDS Action Committee, a local physician, Mindy Mazur from the Department of Public Health, Jane Parker from the South Shore Hospice, and Cohasset School Supt. Stephen Hart.

Young teens, college students, parents and others are encouraged to attend this educational seminar about AIDS. There will be time allotted in the program for questions. All questions will be answered in a manner designed to protect the confidentiality of the audience.

Although there is not an epidemic of AIDS in Cohasset, the Social Service League, its public health nurse and the local Board of Health decided there were questions that needed to be answered. Educating the public about this deadly disease is an important function of the local health agencies, according to public health nurse Mary Ann Hansen.

Cohasset's week...

Ramp to remain

Selectmen are determined that a temporary ramp that provides access to the town hall for handicapped residents should remain until a permanent replacement is made.

The Cohasset Common Historic District Commission reviewed the plans for the town hall addition, and suggested that the temporary ramp at the side of the building be replaced with a permanent one. Selectman answered that until a permanent fixture is in place, the temporary plywood ramp should remain.

According to Executive Secretary Donald Andrew, selectmen plan to have two ramps - one at the rear for access to the office section of the building, and one at the front for access to the auditorium. The front ramp will be installed as part of the work that will change the approach to the front steps to the building and eliminate the asphalt currently there, Andrew explained. That process will be reviewed in detail by the historic district commission at the appropriate time, he added.

Bates Building considered

The Historical Society has suggested that the Bates Building, if declared vacant in the future, could be used as a meeting room and gown museum for the Society.

Society vice president David Chittim suggested the ground floor of the building could be used for a meeting room and for public education and lecture programs by the Society.

The second floor of the Elm Street building could be used by the Society to display its extensive gown collection. The attic and other spaces could be used to store the remainder of the gown collection and other accessories collected by Society members.

Chittim stated, "We believe that our use of this building would be very beneficial to the town in a number of ways and would be appropriate to the design and age of the building."

Selectmen are considering vacating the town office building once the new town hall addition is completed.

Wheelwright Farm hearing

The conservation commission will be meeting with Jeslyn Construction Co., Oct. 6 at 8:30 p.m. to discuss complaints of drainage flooding from the Wheelwright Farms cluster development.

A recent inspection by the conservation commission proved that the development's retention-detention pond is not functioning properly. The commission has also received complaints of drainage from Wheelwrights Farms that has spilled over to an adjacent Beechwood Street property.

The commission also requested that the planning board, their engineer and the drainage subcommittee of the planning board re-inspect the site.

Can't fight fire at 65

According to town counsel, volunteer call firefighters may not assist the local department after the mandatory retiurement age. The town bylaws state that selectmen shall retire from active service any permanent members of the fire or police departments at the age of 65 years.

"Absent any indication to the contrary," Atty. Richard Henderson stated, "we must assume that the policy reasons underlying the legislature's mandate with respect to permanent firefighters would be equally applicable to volunteer or call firemen."

He noted that volunteer firemen who passed the mandatory retirement age could be recalled by selectmen for temporary service in times of true emergency.

Community center change

All gymnastics classes at the Cohasset Community Center will not start until the week of October 12.

Dance classes and most other classes will begin as scheduled during the week of October 5.

Rte. 3A rezoning article

The advisoy board heard an appeal from Dave Chittim, Don Steele and John Bishop on Tuesday night to support their warrant in the upcoming town meeting that would rezone certain lands on 3A into non-commercially zoned land.

Dave Chittim explained to the board his dismay when he drives along Rte. 3A in Hingham viewing forest and when he gets to Cohasset the road is immediately alligned with business. The group would like to rezone the land so that Cohasset could, "more closely resemble her neighbors to the north and the south," said Chittim.

The submitted article would rezone land along 3A between Sohier Street and Beechwood Street.

Board member Arne Gjesteby questioned the group on the legalities of this issue.

"Zoning laws can be reversed, the town can determine its own environment," said Don Steele. "It is the risk that landowners take when they buy property."

Landowners would still be allowed to build if they had filed for a building permit far enough in advance of the change.

"You can see the uncontrolled growth happening right before your eyes," said Steele. "The planning board and the conservation commission don't have that many tools to work with. It seems to me there are no architectural controls and there is no reguard for safety."

"What we have on 3A now is a 50,000 square foot monstrosity," said John Bishop referring to the new Super Stop&Shop. "The town was powerless to prevent it. The zoning bylaws were made thirty years ago and our needs have changed."

"I share your concern," said board member Jill O'Donnell.

"We will vote on this," said board chairman Jane Goedecke, "but not tonight. We want to see how everyone feels before we make a decision."

ZBA bylaw

The advisory board also heard a request from Barbara Power of the zoning board of appeals. Power explained to the board that prior to 1955 there were no formal bylaws and that since then many properties have been grandfathered to conform to building codes. Power explained with a diagram, the zoning bylaw that her board is asking be dropped at the upcoming town meeting.

"It will eliminate half of our traffic," said Power.

The bylaw would allow people to add additions such as porches and decks to their property if they do not interfere with the regulated setback. Presently a homeowner would have to come before the ZBA if he planned to do this to a grandfathered house built before 1955.

The advisory board also unanimously passed a transfer request from the tree and park department for $1,177. An alledgedly stolen car had driven into the fence at Milliken field damaging a post, the gate and the fence itself. Although the police have not given up in their quest to find the culprit, the board decided that the repairs must be made as soon as possible.

State concerned about lack of public access to shores

By Sue Asci
Mariner staff

The state is concerned about limited public access to the seashore. Only 20 percent of the Massachusetts coastline is owned by public entities, and only 50 percent of that amount is actually accessible to the public, according to the state.

Rodney Brown, coastal planner for the state Department of Environmental Management, said, "Massachusetts has one of the most restrictive coastlines in the nation in terms of public access."

Of its 1,500 miles of coastline, only 300 miles are publicly owned or protected, said Brown.

"Twenty percent of the coastline is owned by federal, state or municipal form of government or by a conservation organization," said Brown. "The other 80 percent is privately owned."

Eighteen percent of the publicly owned coastline is located on small islands and has limited access, he said. Some 30 percent of the municipally owned coast often doesn't allow public access or parking.

Public access to the private shores is limited to "fishing, fowling and navigation," according to Colonial ordinance.

Lori Thayer, regional coordinator of the South Shore Regional Office of Coastal Zone Management, recently completed a study of public coastline in the Plymouth region.

The study indicated that of the 218 miles of shoreline from Weymouth to Plymouth, only about 11 miles are publicly owned.

In Plymouth, some 104 acres are municipally owned. Other publicly held land totals two-tenths of a mile. In Kingston, 11 acres are owned municipally; in Marshfield, nearly 88 acres; in Duxbury, nearly 50 acres; in Scituate, 26 acres, and in Hingham, nearly 63 acres are municipally owned and six miles are publicly owned.

Total shoreline, private and publicly held, for most of these towns, except Hingham, varies between 36 and 39 miles each.

Brown reviewed current legislation which is proposing a variety of avenues for public land acquisition. The Open Space Bond bill provides some $25 million for the acquisition of coastal lands by the state Department of Environmental Management; $40 million for the Metropolitan District Commission additions to parks and reservations, and $35 million for Department of Fisheries and Wildlife acquisitions.

The bill also provides for communities to acquire land and includes: $10 million for Self Help; $10 million for Urban Self Help; $25 million for Municipal Recreation and Conservation Fund; $15 million for Strategic Acquisition of Vulnerable Areas, and $10 million for the Strategic Urban Recreation Fund.

Currently, the bill is in the Senate Committee on Ways and Means.

"Zoning and other methods by their nature change over time," said Brown. "Conservation is the most permanent method of protecting the land over the long term. The undeveloped properties are decreasing. In five to 10 years it is quite likely that all large desirable, buildable areas on the coast will be lost. The state will have to take a lead in land acquisition."

Currently, half of the construction in the state occurs along the coast. Coastal Zone Management officials also

Alternatives studied to end disposal dilemma

The town's landfill problems persist.

The chairman of the disposal area study committee told the health board Monday night that until two weeks ago, the situation looked hopeful. But it appears that SEMASS, the trash-to-energy facility in Rochester, may not be able to provide room for Cohasset's solid waste.

"It has not been a very encouraging turn of events," chairman Priscilla Tebbetts stated. "If and when we get a contract, they will only offer us additional space when they build onto the facility."

Board of health members agreed with Tebbetts that alternative disposal programs, including recycling, must be initiated. "We've been a throw away society," health board chairman John Burns warned. "We've been educated that way. We're going to have trouble teaching new tricks.

"But if people don't want to do something - if they want to see their taxes go up, then they can continue to throw all their trash away."

The board of health discussed the need to begin alternative disposal programs in town, which would include an expanded recycling center at the town's landfill.

The disposal committee will be asking for a $48,000 appropriation at the Oct. 26 special town meeting for the design of a $500-$600,000 transfer station at the Cedar Sreet landfill. That station will be necessary to transport the trash from the landfill to another disposal site. The most recent engineering projections estimate the landfill will last another ten years.

In addition, the committee also wanted to know the board's feeling about expanding the recycling program there. As Tebbetts stated, "every dollar we don't put into a (transfer station) facility, will save us money."

Another article in the special town meeting warrant will request that selectmen negotiate a contract with SEMASS. But Tebbetts warned that although SEMASS is expected to offer Cohasset a contract for the facility's proposed addition, that building is not expected to be constructed until late 1990. "So we have a lot of questions," she noted.

According to estimated projections calculated by the disposal committee, SEMASS is expected to offer a $55 per ton contract to Cohasset, along with a $12 per ton transportation price. The cost to operate the transfer station will amount to about $25 per ton, with a $23 per ton amoritization figure. The total cost per ton of the SEMASS program is estimated at $115 per ton, she explained.

According to a SEMASS official, they may offer the town a $49.50 per ton contract if the town signs a 15-20 year contract. It could be $60 per ton for a five-year contract, and every year there would be an escalation of costs, she stated.

The high costs of the SEMASS program initiated discussions of alternatives, including expanded recycling. "even if we had to spend money to truck it (the recycled materials) away, it would be cheaper than $115 per ton," Tebbetts said.

Health Agent Joseph Godzik explained that the current recycling program at the landfill is coordinated by two volunteers. It is sometimes difficult to have the glass and paper goods transported away, because the haulers have so many communities to service, he said.

Tebbetts told the board another trash-to-energy facility scheduled for construction in Milbury may offer the town $55 per ton for a five-year contract.

Cohasset currently produces about 75 tons per day, which would amount to about four truck loads of 20-tons each, she estimated. The committee chairman also noted that many items can not be disposed of in a trash-to-energy facility, including hazardous wastes, tires and household substances.

October 26 warrant articles . . .

The Milliken Field Improvement Committee is sponsoring four articles in the Oct. 26 warrant. The first article is the base of their Milliken and Lillard fields renovation plans. That article requests $661,000 for architectural and construction costs for improvements to Lillard Field located behind the high school. Those improvements will include all demolition and earth work, drainage, plantings, site furnishings, electrical and irrigation improvements at Lillard Field, the area to be used for high school varsity sports.

Warrant article 10 will request an additional $103,098 to install a textured polyurethane surface on the running track behind the high school. The third option to be presented to voters will be article 11, calling for $113,850 to construct bleachers at Lillard Field. And the final article will request $79,034 for the installation of outdoor lighting at Lillard Field.

One of the primary reasons for calling the special town meeting in October, was to give the Disposal Area Study Committee time to prepare a contract with SEMASS, the trash-to-energy solid waste disposal plant in Rochester. Although a contract may be available by special town meeting time, it appears there will be no immediate space for Cohasset in the SEMASS facility.

The same committee is sponsoring a second article to appropriate or transfer money for the design of a transfer station at the Cedar Street landfill. Because $5,000 has previously been appropriated for the project, the committee will request $48,000 to complete the design.

Among the other articles facing special town meeting voters is a request for $1,100,000 for the construction of an addition to the Cohasset police and fire station.

The health board will request $19,425 for engineering services provided by Camp, Dresser and McKee in regard to the on-going environmental matters at Cohasset Heights Ltd. The board will also ask that $47,000 be appropriated so that Camp, Dresser and McKee can complete a hydrogeology/water quality investigation at the commermcial landfill. In addition, there is a budget article which requests the payment of $32,540 to Warner and Stackpole, the firm that provides legal services to the health board in the Cohasset Heights Ltd. litigation.

Leachate spill reported . . .

event of a delayed transport truck, CHL is negotiating with Jetline Services to provide backup transportation services. Dr. Godzik said the landfill owners are attempting to negotiate with the Stoughton firm to ensure quick service in the event of another emergency.

Since the landfill began transporting the leachate to the Connecticut firm, the health board has not received a detailed receipt of the amount taken from the landfill each day. Dr. Godzik said some days it can be as high as 10,000 gallons per day, or an average of 5,000 gallons each day. The health board members said that information must continue to be provided by the new leachate haulers.

Water commissioner Ron Goodwin stated that the leachate overflow is a violation of the landfill's site assignment with the health board. He suggested the board take greater measures to ensure the site assignment is followed. He also stated that the landfill's lapse in its insurance is another violation of the company's site assignment. Although he didn't advocate a complete shutdown of the facility, Good suggested the health board could close down the landfill "until they comply with the requirements of the site assignment."

The board replied that by November, the landfill may be filled to capacity.

At the next health board meeting, they will discuss a quarterly monitoring test wells report. That engineering report is due Oct. 2.

In other matters, an oil spill was reported to the state DEQE earlier this month. Although the health was not notified until this week, the DEQE investigated an oil spill at the old salt house at 40 Border St.

According to the DEQE, the spill was caused by a faulty diesel fuel oil dispenser on a floating pier at the old salt house gasoline/diesel depot. "Consequently," the DEQE officials stated in their letter, "the petroleum product was released into the harbor. The Department had provided absorbent pads and HarborMaster of Cohasset installed absorbent booms around the affected surface area at the site."

The owner of the old salt house is Frank Carey. He is responsible for all cleanup costs and liability caused by the oil spill.

CZM sponsors forum

State officials presented an overview of a myriad of coastal issues and related pending legislation to capacity crowds at the State House during last week's coastal forum.

During the day-long forum Sept. 22 sponsored by the state Coastal Zone Management Agency, interested residents and officials from many coastal communities examined issues from pollution to hurricanes.

Much of the legislation explained at the conference is being introduced by the state Committee on Natural Resources and Agriculture.

"The coast is part of our past and part of our present," said state Rep. Steven Angelo, co-chairman of the Committee on Natural Resources. "We must ensure that it is part of our future."

Secretary of Environmental Affairs James Hoyte said that many of today's coastal problems have resulted from "a poorly developed infrastructure and poorly designed sewage treatment plants."

"Ever since Prop. 2-1/2, it has become harder to convince communities that they need a strong planning department," he said.

Seashore access . . .

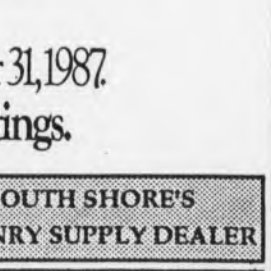
noted that the National Planning Association projects a 17 percent increase in population in the state to seven million people by the year 2000.

The Self Help Program, established in 1961, assists municipalities in acquiring land for conservation and passive recreation. Urban Self-Help, established in 1977, assists cities and urban towns in acquiring land for park and recreation purposes. Both programs are administered by the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs.

Another bill, which is currently before the House Ways and Means Committee, allows for communities to establish "land banks."

The bill, HB 5545, would allow a city or town to vote for a small local real estate transfer tax. The money would be put into a fund to be used to purchase land for conservation. Funds could be used for acquisition, conservation or agricultural restrictions, trails, park rehabilitation or maintenance costs.



The tax could be set at 1 percent, or less, of the purchase price of the real estate.

Affordable housing list just preliminary

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

A list of possible affordable housing sites recently compiled by town officials was only meant to be the first step in a long process.

According to Selectmen's Executive Secretary Donald Andrew, the list deliberately contained properties currently considered unbuildable. "We gave the list to town boards for their comment and information," he explained this week. "We knew a number of the sites are unbuildable now, but that status could change in the future."

Andrew offered the explanation after members of two town boards complained that many sites were unbuildable. The conservation commission requested that selectmen "more thoroughly prepare, document and research information in the future."

Andrew and Building Inspector Donald Robbins compiled the list in response to a request by the Executive Office of Communities and Development (EOCD). The list, which was submitted to several appropriate town boards and committees, was sent to the state Aug. 15.

Andrew requested input and comment from several town boards, saying, "we wanted to know precisely which land would perc (successfully pass groundwater percolation tests) and which lands wouldn't," Andrew stated. "We wanted their comments, if they knew anything good about the land, or whether it would be impossible to ever build upon.

"We knew a number of the sites are unsuitable now. But that could change if they were sewered in the future, or, in the case of the Osgood School, if it was given up for school use in future years," he added.

Andrew said they solicited the information from the town boards "simply for their informational input. We needed to know if the land would never perc, if is is in the wetlands, or if the land would make suitable housing sites. We wanted their information, knowing that many of the sites could never be considered, as I stated in a cover letter when I sent along the proposed list."

That list contained 24 town-owned sites throughout town. It included the plot number and assessor's map and requested comments from the particular board members.

The planning board and conservation commission returned their list last week after review by the members. Many of the proposed sites were determined by the board members to be unsuitable for building. Explanations of their comments were sent along to selectmen.

But Conservation Commission Chairman Merle Brown, in a reply which accompanied the board's remarks, stated, "the commissioners felt unanimously that it is necessary to request that your office more thoroughly prepare, document and research information in the future and come back to us with a "reasonable list.' Your list contained parcels under water (reservoir) and under the high school tennis courts, and containing three town drinking water wells.

"Commissioners agreed that approximately 90 pertcent of the listings contained land which may not be appropriate," the commissioner wrote.

Among the town-owned sites deemed unsuitable by the conservation commission were three parcels at the town's landfill on Cedar Street. In addition to a methane gas leak, the area presently contained the highway department's salt storage facility. A Beach Street site is intersected by the Mohawk Brook and is in the flood plain.

A four-acre site on Briarwood Lane off Bancroft Road includes the high school's tennis courts, and some sections are wet, they stated. One portion may be useable, according to the board members. A two-acre site on Spring Street is in the floodplain and includes a portion of James Brook; a 19-acre tract owned by the water department is the site of the former water treatment plant and is presently used to deposit sludge and contains lagoons; and a tract along Aaron River Road and Beechwood Street "may be all under water," according to the commission.

A ten-acre site with access off Beechwood Street is part of the town's reservoir, the former Sportsmen's Club on Rte. 3A is surrounded by swamp, and the 11-acre Ellms Meadow is in the floodplain, contains ledge and the James Brook. The planning board noted that the town water and recreation boards may object to using that site for housing.

The planning board and conservation commission made similar comments - the planning board noting that possible housing sites may include the Osgood School in the future; town-owned rental units at Government Island; and a portion of land off King Street which is marshland and will need conservation approval.

Several privately-owned sites were also considered by the conservation commission and planning board. One parcel owned by B. and R. Forde, accesses from Cedar Street, a portion of which may be buildable, according to the planning board. The estate of George E. Curtis off Jerusalem Road and Black Rock Road contains four buildings and "much of it appears to be buildable," they stated.

Executive Secretary Andrew said the town still has received no official notification from EOCD stating that Cohasset is unreasonably restrictive in its housing practices. "But we have no agreement with them, as they have required," he warned.

Although Andrew has repeatedly attempted to contact EOCD officials, no one has returned his telephone calls. "Conceivably, because we have not been officially notified by the state, we could still apply for state discretionary funds," he said, explaining that an absence of a fair housing agreement between the town and state results in a loss of those discretionary funds."The only thing we wanted right now is a grant to hire a consultant to help with our fair housing plan. Without an agreement with the state, they said they wouldn't even consider such a request for us. So the grant application won't be submitted. If we come to an agreement with the state, we'll happily apply for the grant."

Peace coalition sponsors comedy show Oct. 22

Can you imagine yourself laughing about the management of nuclear power plants, arms control, or political hypocrisy?

Learn how to do just that with the Atomic Comics, the nationally acclaimed San Francisco comedy team, who will be coming to Norwell Oct. 22.

Sponsored by the South Shore Peace Coalition, the two-hour show will be held at the North River Community Club, 513 River St., at 8 p.m. Tickets are $8 in advance and $10 at the door. Students and seniors are $5.

The Atomic Comics are Fran Peavey and Charles Varon, who met during a peace demonstration in 1978 at the Diablo Canyon nuclear power plant.

They started doing comedy about nuclear war in 1980 but have since expanded their subject matter to other anxiety-producing issues of the '80s. They have performed throughout the United States and have been hailed as "hilarious" by the Washington Post.

Varon studied acting at Brown University where he performed in a variety of plays and began developing his own comic material. For example, in 1980 he wrote Proliferation, a short story about a bank vice-president who wins a nuclear bomb in a poker game.

New relocation service available

Dwyer & Mullin ERA of Cohasset announced a new relocation service to benefit its home buying and selling customers.

The creative new program, developed in conjunction with Advanced Traffic Services Inc. (ATS), a California-based relocation management firm, is designed to eliminate the high costs and problems often associated with moving.

The program will feature interstate moving discounts and move arrangement services through ATS, which will utilize most of the major van lines.

This program requires Preferred Customer Discount Certificates. For more information, contact Dwyer & Mullin ERA Realtors at 383-9100.

Homebuyers reconsider ARMS

When mortgage interest rates returned to double digit levels last spring, home buyers began to take a second look at adjustable rate mortgages.

"Adjustable rate mortgages (ARMs) appear to be regaining popularity among home buyers," said Robert J. Mullin, president and owner of Dwyer & Mullin Real Estate in Cohasset. "Since last spring, the average interest rate on 30 year fixed-rate mortgages climbed two percentage points, form 8.5 or 9 percent to 10.5 or 11 percent. Meanwhile initial rates on adjustables remained steady at about 7.5 to 8 percent."

Mullin, a Certified Residential Specialist and past president of the Plymouth County Board of Realtors, said today's adjustable-rate mortgages are attractive to home buyers because ARMs mean lower monthly payments.

☐ Stephanie Endris of Cohasset is a member of the 1987 Women's Cross Country Team at Dickinson College.

☐ If you can believe it, try-outs for the Nutcracker have already been held! There were 350 kids that vied for 175 spots and six girls from Cohasset won spots to be in the December Ballet! Alyssa Cross, Meredith Equi, Keeley Dwyer, Karla Kennedy, Courtney Schultz and Melissa Weier were selected to dance. The tryouts were an exhausting two days long, but we bet the girls all agree that it was worth the effort! Won't it be fun to go to the Nutcracker and see them all?

☐ Members of the Notre Dame Academy Alumnae Association are planning a luncheon and fashion show to benefit the organizations scholarship fund. The event will be held on Saturday, October 17th at the Boston Marriott Newton with fashions from Hoffman's, coordinated and commentated by Charlotte Barker. Tickets are $30 and may be ordered from the Academy Alumnae Office at 740-2127. Sister Anne Monica Ruane, S.N.D., principal of Notre Dame Academy, has announced that 127 freshman joined the school this year. The class, which is one of the largest in NDA history, represents a geographic area of 27 cities and towns from Milton to Cape Cod. Cohasset resident Amy O'Rourke is a member of the class of 1991 at the Academy.

☐ Michael and Linda Peraino have an added reason to celebrate the Fall this year! They have a brand new baby girl, born on Sept 12th at South Shore Hospital to keep them busy! Congratulations!

☐ The DeCruz family certainly has a lot of news after the busy summer . . . Todd DeCruz spent six weeks of his summer at Milton Academy, where he was enrolled in M.A.S.P., Mass. Advanced Studies Program. Todd took two courses, Exploring Essays and Math, and he received honors in both. Not only was he number 4 after completing these courses, he was the only student to get the solution to two of the math problems presented to the class! Suzanne DeCruz just returned from a two week stay in Holland, having stayed with friends that they met last summer. Rudy and Joan also had another reason to be especially happy, they celebrated their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary this month. Actually the real celebrating will be at the end of next month, when they are scheduled to spend two glorious weeks in Hawaii. We can just see Joanie learning how to Hula now, hope you have a wonderful time guys . . .

Cohasset resident Troy Haase, a junior at SS Vo-tech, receives instruction in blueprint reading.

☐ A salute goes to Patrolman Richard Yocum, who certainly was a hero last week! Officer Yocum saw Paul L. Rooney, a fisherman who was checking his pots, capsized off of Sandy Cove. He hopped in a skiff, motored out the Rooney, and pulled him out of the ocean. Fortunately, Paul was not hurt, his boat was safely towed by Harbormaster Stephen Osborne and Richard was there to respond!!

☐ Super news comes from Hatherly County Club and the committee that ran this year's Jimmy Fund Tournament. Although the skies were threatening several times and the ground a little soggy, they raised $9,000 for their benefit. The committee that organized this consisted of Rocco Laugelle, Jack Lynch, Clark Chatterton, Bob Magna and Berni Mulcahy. The raffle committee outdid itself with the prizes that they gathered . . . the gals responsible were Izzie Salvador, Polly Litchfield, Pat Laugelle, Janet Figueiredo, Mimi Chaterton, and Jeanne McAuliffe. Jeanne contributed an extra bonus! She made a Irish knit sweater to be raffled separately and it raised over $500! It certainly is a community effort — the selectmen played, Harold Litchfield,Bob Jackson,Bill Fallon,Paul Laugelle, Harry Ritter, Peter Laugelle, Don Andrew and Jack Sullivan were some of the golfers; Hugo's supplied the hors d'oerures; The George Mealy Post donated the yummy food that was given out at the Half-way House (the men claim they can still taste Polly Litchfield's sausage subs, they were so good!), and Carmine of the Strawberry Parfait supplied the dinner at cost!! Two local banks, the Cohasset Savings Bank and the Pilgrim Co-Operative Bank both contributed a lot, and Hatherly Country Club closed down the course for the Tournament. There were trophies awarded, they are all in honor of deceased residents . . . Ed Welch won the Fred Troy most improved golfer, Brian Ganey won the Ed Lynch Memorial for the closest to the pin, Mike Emanello won the Marsh Litchfield trophy for being the most persistant golfer, and Bobby Hernan (who flew up from Florida for the event) won the Patricia Litchfield trophy for the most enthusiastic golfer. Carl Sestito received a standing ovation, he played the tournament while celebrating his 79th birthday!! There were 160 golfers out for the event, and it surely was a grand effort indeed!!

☐ The school system won't be the same without Math teacher Claire Brady, who will take a full-time teaching position at Hull. Claire will still be spotted around Cohasset though, she is the girls field hockey coach.

☐ Caroline Bonner, daughter of Carol Bonner of Red Gate Lane, just returned from a nice trip to Europe. She sure took in a lot of countries in two weeks time, and reports that she had a wonderful time doing it!

Free press & speed

Upon the bicentennial of our Constitution, it is important to note that freedom of the press is essential in a democracy.

"Nothing could be more irrational than to give the people power and to withhold from them information, without which power is abused," said James Madison, a principal architect of the Constitution's First Amendment. "A people who mean to be their own governors must arm themselves with the power which knowledge gives. A popular government without popular information, or the means of acquiring it, is but a prologue to a farce or a tragedy, or perhaps both."

The First Amendment guarantees free speech and the right to assemble peaceably, as well as freedom of the press. The framers of our Constitution realized the value of a free press in a democracy. But do we?

Often referred to as the Fourth Estate, the free press is essential to a free society. It allows a free flow of information which enables the people to keep current on those they elect to represent them in government. At its best, a free press can prevent abuse of power.

Freedom of the press cannot be taken for granted. In foreign countries, journalists have been jailed, beaten, harassed and expelled. In our own country, Congress has passed amendments limiting access to organized crime and drug enforcement records, while giving companies a stronger veto over release of business records held by federal agencies.

These records are not only being withheld from the press. They are being withheld from the public.

The press acts as a watchdog, guarding the public's First Amendment rights.

Unfortunately, the public has developed a perception of the press as more of an attack dog than a watchdog. According to recent studies, the public likes a free press, but thinks it gets too pushy and intrusive. It likes it to be competitive, but not sensational.

The public thinks the power to expose waste and corruption is good, but it doesn't like the power to ruin innocent lives.

Alan Barth, former editorial writer for The Washington Post, once wrote, "If you want a watchdog to warn you of intruders, you must put up with a certain amount of mistaken barking. Now and then he will sound off because a stray dog seems to be invading his territory . . . or because he is outraged by a postman. And that kind of barking can, of course, be a nuisance. But if you muzzle him and leash him and teach him decorum, you will find that he doesn't do the job for which you got him in the first place. Some extraneous barking is the price you must pay for his service as a watchdog."

The First Amendment is a protection for all of us and a responsibility for the press - which the press should carry out even more effectively.

Isaiah Thomas, a Patriot editor and pioneer of the American Fourth Estate, once said, "Should the liberty of the press be once destroyed, farewell the remainder of our invaluable rights and privileges."

Attention to Elm Street detail

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

Hubert Vanderlugt is a stickler for details. He is also the owner of Hub Shipping Co. which has grown from a small shipping business run out of Vanderlugt's home into a bustling center for international trade here in Cohasset.

"Rather than go to Boston," said Vanderlugt a native of Holland, "we decided to buy an old house."

The old house that Vanderlugt bought in Cohasset village is a testimony to fine hand done New England architecture. The post and beam style house converted into an office on Elm Street exhibits many of the original materials that the original dwelling sported in 1830.

"We renewed some aspects," said Vanderlugt, "but we kept the original doors and some of the old boards. We needed a little more space to stay in Cohasset," explained Vanderlugt.

The door to the main office at Hub shipping is the same door that Thomas Beal had in his blacksmith shop in 1830. The door is inscribed with Beal's original nameplate and the original bell still alerts the office that guests are arriving.

"It was a half year process trying to get the necessary permits for the renovations," said Vanderlugt who was granted five variances by town boards.

"Eventually we convinced them that we were going to live up to the commitment that was needed to reconstruct," said Vanderlugt.

"It was fun, I feel that the history is very important," added Vanderlugt, "it was not a way to get a variance."

The entrance to Hub Shipping is a large foyer. Directly in front is a wall sized map of the world. A large fireplace takes up another wall. The ceiling is about forty feet straight up with balconies peering down to the foyer.

The last renovation to this home was done in 1920.

"We found some very interesting newspapers from that date stuffed in the wall," said Vanderlugt.

Instead of the normal five foot set back, the rear of the building has a one inch set-back from town property.

"We tried to jack it up and move it," said Vanderlugt but we found that the back was 11 inches lower that the front and it just wouldn't work."

The slope is slightly visable in Vanderlugt's office which slants slightly towards Elm Street.

To reinforce the building Vanderlugt had his carpenters install new ceiling beams which are side by side with the original reinforcements from 1830. The only differnece is the age of the wood. Vanderlugt has partitioned off sections that show the original walls.

Hub shipping is a busy place. When the phone rings it is as likely that the call is from Sweden, Greece, Stockholm or another far away port than from the Vanderlugt residence on Woodland Drive. Hubert Vanderlugt and his wife both have offices at the Elm Street office as does their son Victor who is a C.P.A.

Vanderlugt's love for history is not something new.

"He saves everything," said Hella Dalton another intergral part of the Hub Shipping team.

The redone foyer holds a gigantic ship's compass and a ship's wheel. The nautical design continues throughout the office with pictures, knick knacks and other nautical memorabilia.

"We keep records of everything around here," said Dalton, "phone calls, messages, you get used to it."

Vanderlugt is a member of Cohasset Historic Commission, the Cohasset Common Histoic Commision as well as the Trustees of the 2nd Congregational Church and the Chamber of Commerce.

Vanderlugt has a complete record of the amazing renovations to Hub Shipping in a photograph album. The pictures take the viewer from the ancient house to the newly renovated replica with some additional rooms added.

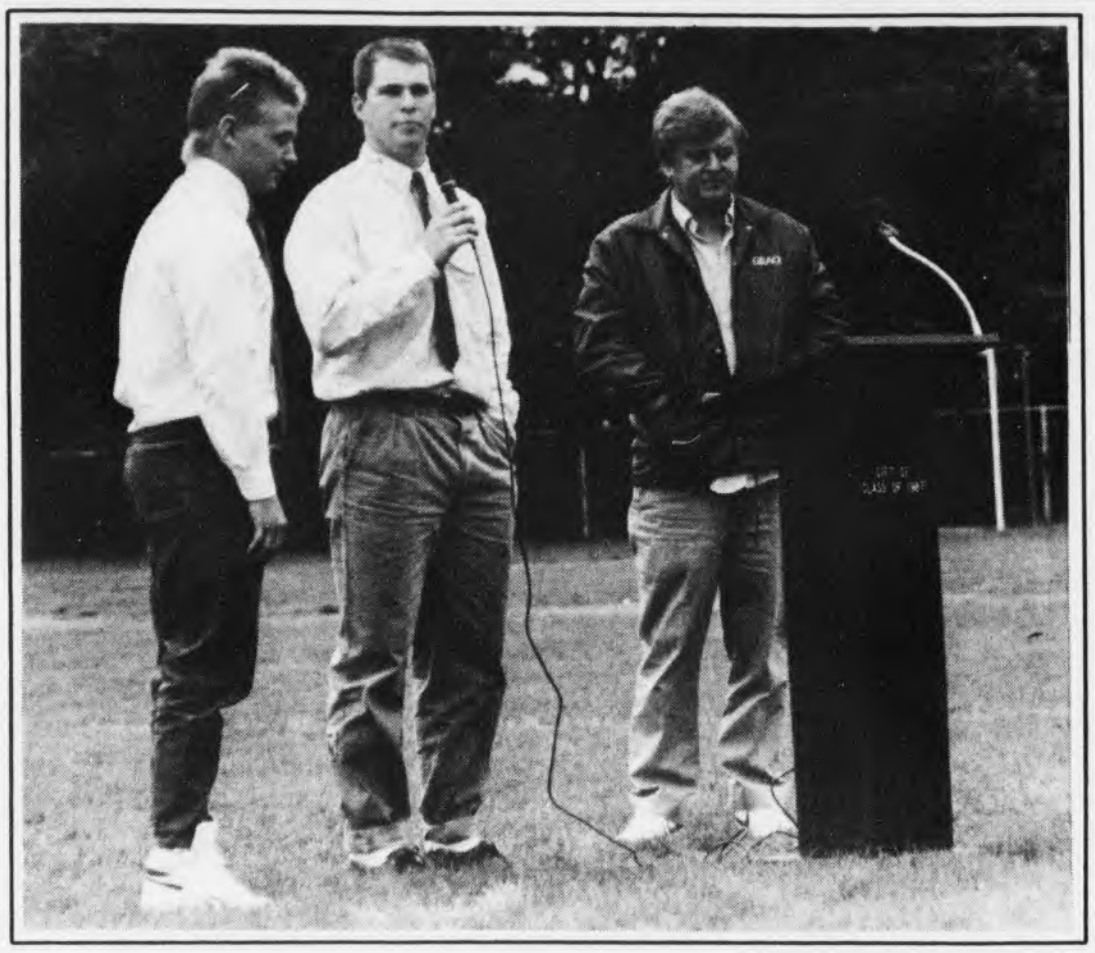
Nuke plant refueling on hold

By Sue Asci
Mariner staff

Refueling of the Pilgrim nuclear power plant, scheduled for last weekend, was on hold at press time (Monday) because two electrical relays in the containment isolation system have to be changed.

This action was deemed necessary after senior management review of a checklist for starting refueling.

"The relays were not faulty," said Edison spokesman Elaine Robinson. "It was determined that the relays in question may not be fully qualified to withstand an earthquake. Despite the fact that this is not earthquake territory, the relays are being changed to those that are fully seismically-qualified."



Robinson said the relays initiate isolation of the secondary containment in the event of an abnormal occurence in the plant. The secondary containment is the back-up safety system. The relays would initiate the isolation of any radiation to prevent escape.

Robinson said plant officials hope to begin refueling in approximately one week in preparation for re-start. Some 580 uranium fuel assemblies will be moved into the reactor during the eight- to 10-day process.

Once it begins, a specially trained operator will drive the large refueling crane that spans the refuel pool and adjacent reactor cavity inside the reactor building. A second operator serving as the "spotter" will place each fuel assembly in a designated location in the reactor. A third operator will remain in the control room to monitor the instrumentation as the fuel assembly enters the core.

The senior-reactor-operator supervisors will remain on the refueling floor to oversee the operation, according to Edison.

About one-third of the fuel is replaced during each refueling outage. The current refueling is the seventh for Pilgrim since it began operation in 1972.

Defense key to weekend football victories

By Pete Kasperowicz
Mariner correspondent

Cohasset High's football team is off to a great start. Their record is 2-0: they've defeated East Boston by a score of 14-6, and Millis by a score of 32-14, and Coach Phil Pisano couldn't be more pleased.

"The guys have really been super. We've got a team that is strong both offensively and defensively," Pisano said.

Although quarterback Pete Sandblom scored both touchdowns on two short runs, Pisano credits the defense for the win over East Boston.

"East Boston is a quick team, and they are in the possession of a very good quarterback. Our defense was strong and able to hold their ground, and so East Boston rarely had a chance to penetrate. Players like Sean Fitzsimmons, Glen Froio, Derek Lacks, Mike Meers, Matt Maloney, and Adam Whitman really held the key in that game."

One week later, the team gave a repeat performance against Millis, crushing them 32-14.

"Again, our defense was superior and our offense was even better than the last game. Pete (Sandblom, QB) is really beginning to take charge out there," Pisano said.

Sandblom scored again, although this time he was not alone. Other scorers were Sean Fitzsimmons, Craig Mulcahy, and Derek Lacks (who was recently voted WATD's Player of the Week). Jim Maguire also chipped in with an incredible 42 yard field goal.

The team is proud and excited of their two consecutive wins, and hopes to keep the streak alive this Saturday against Whitman-Hanson.

"Whitman-Hanson has a strong football tradition, and it will most definitely be an exciting game."

The team shares Pisano's view on the upcoming game. Adam Whitman, defensive and offensive tackle, sees it as a very important one.

"We're playing well; kids like Matt Maloney and Ronny Massa are playing great defense, and the offensive line is strong. The Whitman-Hanson kids are big, and this game will set the beat for the rest of the season," Whitman said.

Boy's Soccer

Cohasset's soccer team is continuing to show their strength this season: their record is 3-0-1.

Aside from their past victories against Hull and Abington, they recently defeated Norwell 2-0, and tied Sandwich 0-0 last Thursday in what proved to be their toughest game all season. Not that they were surprised. Even before the Norwell game, the team was thinking of the long bus trip to Sandwich.

"Sandwich is going to be the team to beat this year," Coach Dan Magner said.

However, the Norwell game came first. The ball was mostly out of control for the first twenty minutes, as both teams were forced to adjust to the slippery Cohasset field. The fear of scoring quickly dissipated as Jay Staunton took an unexpected shot from midfield and scored. Steve Myers was credited with the assist.

The first half ended with that score of 1-0, and Cohasset, obviously excited about Staunton's edge-winning shot, felt sure of victory. Coach Magner thought otherwise.

"It was a good shot, but the same thing could happen to them. We're passing well, but we're not shooting enough. If we can continue to pressure the goalie and score one or two more times, we should be fine."

It was Jimmy Gallagher who carried out Magner's orders, scoring the second and last goal of the game with help from Danny Pompeo (Pompeo later left the game with a broken nose, and did not play against Sandwich).

Magner was pleased with the victory but was already looking ahead at Sandwich.

"The whole team is really looking strong. Sandwich will give us a good game, but we're ready."

Sandwich has a big facility.

"They have their own McDonald's right inside the school," someone muttered as the bus stopped.

Although the game ended without the ball entering anyone's net, it was an intense, sweaty contest. Both teams were extremely physical; players were constantly falling and getting up, and one player from each team was injured.

"They were a bunch of hackers. I think their goalie was weak, but he wasn't tested because it was hard to take a good shot," Senior Dave Shultz said.

Defenseman Steve Myers further pinpointed the reason for Cohasset's inability to score: "It was a defensively minded game, and their defense was just as good as ours."

At the half, Magner explained that there was nothing to complain about.

"They're a good, solid team. All you guys can do is continue to pressure the goalie and keep a strong defense."

Cohasset definitely controlled the game during the second half, but aside from that it was a repeat of the first half. Suddenly the whistle blew and it was over at 0-0, but Cohasset wasn't upset entirely.

"It was a great game to watch and a great game to play. We'll get them when they come to Cohasset," goalie Joel Reidy said.

Coach Magner shared the same opinion: "I think it's incredible that we tied them on their own turf. It would have been a sin to have lost that game. That still counts as a shut-out."

"Good game, gentlemen. We now have three shut-outs. Two more and you get Gatorade instead of water," Magner shouted back at his players.

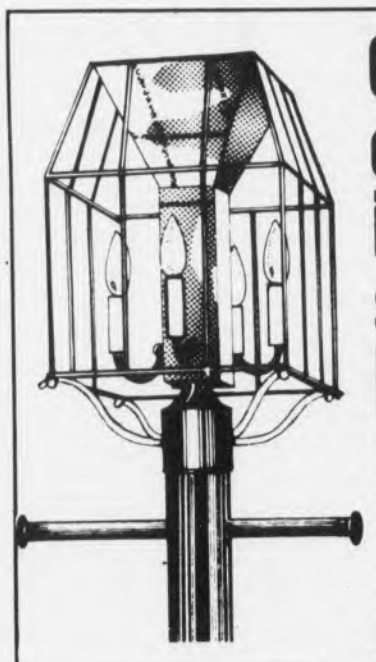
Girls big winners this week

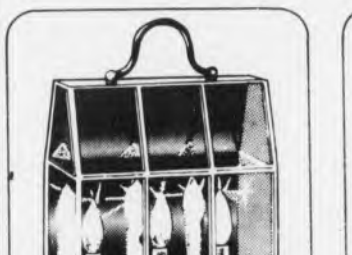
By Jen Plante
Mariner correspondent

Last Friday, Sept. 25, the Skippers' field hockey team faced the Scituate Sailors at home and defeated them by a score of 3 - 0.

Coach Clare Brady felt that it was an excellent effort by the girls and they stayed together throughout the entire game.

"It really makes a big difference when they cooperate like they did today," remarked Brady.





Defensively, Coach Brady said that Coleby Manty performed well. Also, Sophomore goalkeeper, Candi Jones impressed everyone with her first shutout in a varsity game. Jones, who is starting goalie, made great saves against the hard-hitting Scituate team. Cohasset's goals were scored by Seniors Debbie Hartley, and Cindy Spooner, with an assist from Julie Bowdoin.

Junior inner Sara Bishop also scored with an assist from Junior Heather St. Onge. This week the field hockey team will face Hull on Tuesday and Sandwich

Thursday, Oct. 8, will be an early release day in the Cohasset Public Schools. There will be no afternoon kindergarten sessions and other students will be dismissed according to the following schedule:

Junior/Senior High School, noon; Deer Hill School, 12:40 p.m.; Joseph Osgood School, 12:50 p.m.

Lunch will be served in the elementary schools and food service will be available at the Junior/Senior High School.

This early release day has been approved by the Cohasset School Committee to allow the staff to participate in grade level or department meetings.

Vo-tech students

Among the 500 students attending South Shore Vocational Technical High School in Hanover this year, five are Cohasset residents.

The school which began its twenty-sixth year this month opened with a Freshman Orientation Day followed by upperclassmen joining the new students. Guidance Counselor Pam Titus noted the opening of the regional school "went quite smoothly".

Students from Cohasset are enrolled in many of the 17 trade areas offered at South Shore. Shop programs include Automotive, Auto Body, Heating-ventilation and Air Conditioning, Welding, Percision Metal Fabrication, Machine Shop, Carpentry, Drafting, Electronics, Packaging Machine Maintenance, Electrical, Culinary Arts, Graphic Arts, Marine Technology, Painting and Wall finishing, Merchandising-Marketing and Management and Cosmetology.

Included in the South Shore Vocational Technical High School region are the towns of Hanover, Cohasset, Abington, Rockland, Norwell, Scituate, Whitman and Hanson. The school is presently housed in two compuses in Hanover and Abington.

National Merit semifinalists

The National Merit Scholarship Corporation has released the names of those seniors who have been named semifinalists or are being commended in the National Merit program.

The following student is a semifinalist in the competition for Merit Scholarships to be offered in 1988: MaryBeth McNamara.

The students who will receive Letters of Commendation are: Scott Caristo, Adam Durant, Sarah Hamilton and Charles Sturdy.

Over one million students entered the 1987 Merit program by taking the PSAT/NMSQT in 1986. Of two groups honored in each annual Merit program, the larger one includes approximately 35,000 students who are commended for high performance. Commended students placed in the top five percent of all participants, however, they do not continue in the competition for Merit Scholarships because they score slightly below their state's semifinalist qualifying score.

Approximately 15,000 students, or the top half of one percent of the state's high school senior class, have qualified as semifinalists. To be considered for Merit Scholarships, semifinalists will qualify as finalists by meeting additional requirements. In April, the names of Merit Scholarshp winners will be announced.

American studies

To commemorate the bicentennial of the signing of the Constitution: Students spent the first two weeks of school studying the need for a central government and the work of the creative men who gave the framework of our way of life.

In this context, students received a portion of ABC's special the "Blessings of Liberty." A culminating activity was organized by Mrs. Judith-Ann Ojerholm, a Cohasset lawyer. She prepared a legal fact sheet and led the classes in an examination of the legal implications of our Bill of Rights in a contemporary setting.

New art curriculum

Jean O'Malley and Colleen Lucas presented the new K-12 art curriculum to the school committee, Monday, Sept. 21. The curriculum is the product of a year of work with a Horace Mann Grant.

Copies are available for reading in the Principal's office at each of the schools.

Immunization requirements in school

School has started, and once again it is time to make certain that your child has had the proper immunizations.

Immunization requirements vary from state to state, but the Massachusetts Department of Public Health has issued the following childhood immunization schedule. Except where indicated, immunizations are required for admission to kindergarten or licensed day care centers.

Two months: DPT—diptheria-tetanus-pertussis combined vaccine; Polio.

Four months: DTP; Polio.

Six months: DTP.

Fifteen months: MMR-measles-mumps-rubella combined vaccine.

Eighteen months: DTP: Polio (may be administered with the MMR vaccine at 15 months).

Two years: Haemophilus b polysaccharide vaccine recommended but not required for school or day care entrance.

School Entry Age (4-6 years): DTP; Polio (recommended but not mandatory)

Lifetime: Tetanus and diptheria boosters recommended at 10-year intervals.

The following is information on these common immunizations, the diseases they prevent, and possible side effects.

DTP Vaccine—Immunization with DTP is a very effective way to prevent diptheria, pertussis and tetanus. It is actually three vaccines combined into one and given starting in early infancy. Several shots are needed for adequate protection—three doses in the child's first year of life, and a fourth at about 18 months.

A booster shot is important for children who are about to enter school and should be given between their fourth and seventh birthdays. Usual side effects of the DTP vaccine are often fever, irritability for up to two days and some soreness and swelling in the injection site. Most reactions are not significant and will disappear within a few days.

Notify your doctor immediately if any of the following occur: high-pitched, persistent crying for more than three hours; excessive sleepiness; limpness and paleness; temperature of 103° or higher; and convulsions.

Polio and Oral Polio Vaccine—Immunization with oral live polio vaccine (OPV) is given by mouth starting in early infancy. Several doses are needed. Young children should get two or more doses in their first year and another at about 18 months of age. An additional dose is important for children when they enter school or when there is a high risk of polio.

Health experts recommend oral live polio vaccine for people up to age 18. OPV very rarely (one in about 8.1

Recreation programs feature ski trips

More than 300 children in grades K through 9 are enrolled in recreation soccer programs for boy's and girl's.

There will be 20 teams (six on six play) for three divisions of grade 3 through 9 players and three one-hour clinics weekly for about 130 kindergarten, first and second grade girls and boys. Soccer is scheduled to conclude Nov. 14, after eight weeks of play and clinics.

Youth basketball will begin shortly after soccer ends. Registration for youth basketball, girl's and boy's grades K-9, is scheduled for Saturday, Nov. 7. Details will be forthcoming closer to the date of registration.

AEROBIC EXERCISE SCHEDULE

Men and women interested in aerobic exercise classes should call the recreation department office for details or you may register at class with the instructors. A number of classes meet weekly and more may be added as demand creates.

Classes are held in eight-week sessions, meeting twice weekly on Tuesday and Thursday evenings. You may register for one night per week or two nights per week. The cost for 16 hours or eight-week session, meeting twice weekly, is $32. Should you wish to attend one evening per week the cost is $16 for the eight-week session. Classes meet from 5 to 6 p.m. and 6:15 to 7:15 p.m., Tuesday and Thursdays. Sandra Wiggan's 5 to 6 p.m. class is scheduled to begin Tuesday, Oct. 6, and you may register at class time with Ms. Wiggans.

Margaret Watson's 6:15 to 7:15 p.m. classes are underway. However, you may join any class at any time, because the fee will be pro-rated based upon the number of classes left in any given session. You may also register at class time with Ms. Watson for the 6:15 to 7:15 p.m. classes.

Aerobic exercise is not only one of the most beneficial programs for overall fitness, it also is a great social program, affording the opportunity to meet new people with like interests.

Recreation department aerobics classes are open to both men and women, and are conducted 12 months of the year in the town hall auditorium. The floor has just been sanded and refinished. Being a hard wood floor makes the hall ideal for this type of exercise program.

Classes will be added as demand is created, and a Saturday morning, 9 to 10 a.m. class will probably begin during November. Details will be announced at a later date.

Checks for fee payment for both programs should be made payable to the Town of Cohasset. Classes are limited in size, and both Watson and Wiggans are experienced, knowledgeable instructors who will be available for individualized attention.

SKI TRIPS

The Cohasset Recreation Department will again sponsor a number of day ski trips to New Hampshire. The costs vary from trip to trip. However, the recreation department does not generate surplus revenue from ski trips. The trip cost reflects the per capita cost only.

The first trip will be on Sunday, Dec. 13 to Loon Mt. Registrations will be announced shortly, but you will have to be registered before Friday, Nov. 20.

Generally, prices range from $29 to $38 per person for the package (ie: transportation and lift ticket). Rentals and lessons are additional and are not yet available, except for the Dec. 13, Loon Mt. trip which will be $33 per person for non-beginners, (ie: transportation and lift ticket, except no gondola) and $36 for the beginner package which includes transportation, beginner slopes lift ticket, lesson and equipment rental.

As you see from the $36 price, the beginner package is a great deal for those who have never skied or have skied infrequently.

The $36 package will put you on the novice slopes with a lesson and all your gear for the day.

The tentative schedule for 1987 and 1988 is:

Sunday, Dec. 13, Loon Mt.; Monday, Jan. 11, Gunstock (Martin Luther King Day); Sunday, Jan. 24, Pats Peak; Sunday, Feb. 14, King Ridge; Sunday, Feb. 28, Gunstock; Sunday, March 13, King Ridge.

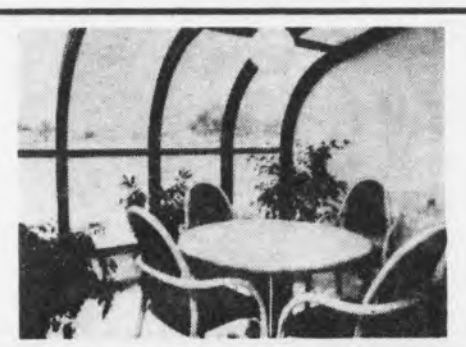
Generally, buses will leave from town hall at 5:30 a.m. and return about 7:30 p.m. Participants should report to town hall at 5:15 a.m., and parents should be at town hall for pick-up at 7:15 p.m. in the evening. The recreation office will be open both in the a.m. and p.m. for bathrooms, telephone, etc.

While registrations will be accepted via telephone, they are not confirmed until payment has been made. Trips are registered individually and payments must be made by the designated time or the trip is in jeopardy of not being conducted. All ski trips are conducted through the Recreation Commissions self-supporting programs, revolving account fund established by the state legislature. Because time is needed to collect, account, deposit, and draw upon this fund, it is essential that payments are made within the time limits indicated.

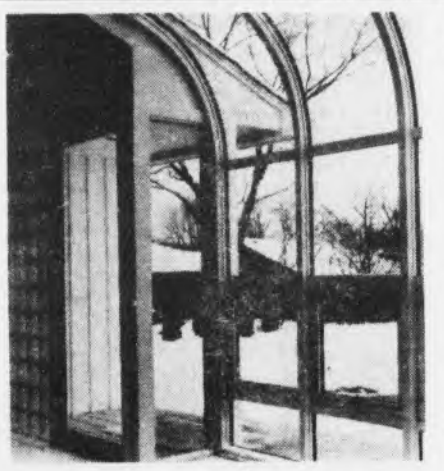
A waiting list is most always maintained for the ski trip rosters. Should you be unable to make a trip that is paid for, call the recreation office as soon as possible, anytime night or day. If no one is in, leave a message on the recorder. Messages will be checked as late as 9 p.m. the eve of the trip.

Because of the waiting list you will most probably be replaced on the trip which will guarantee a 100 percent refund. Should a replacement not be available, you will be refunded your lift ticket money, but will have to pay for your seat on the bus and about 60 percent of your fee will be returned. However, it is rare that you could not be replaced by someone.

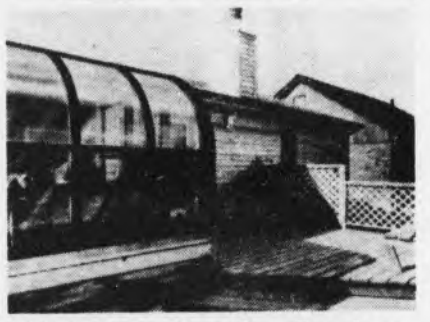
Should you miss the bus in the morning, you have a couple of options. First, you can probably catch up with the bus while it is still on the back roads, before reaching Route 3, without having to speed. Second, if you can get to the ski area, you can check in with our chaperone and come home with us on the bus. In either of these cases, check with the recreation director at the recreation office before doing anything.



The recreation department will have at least two chaperones on each bus. That is about one person for every 22. The chaperones are there to assist you and to make certain everyone receives the proper rentals and lift tickets. The chaperones and ski patrol are also on the mountain all day, should you need them.



Parents, while there has never been any serious accidents and only a couple of very minor accidents since we have been conducting ski trips, you should know that the recreation director will be available to receive call from the chaperones and/or ski patrol in the event that an accident should occur. You will be called at home right away. Therefore, if you are not going to be at your home during the day, please leave a number where you can be reached, and if possible, at the recreation office when you drop your children off in the morning.



Generally, only one bus holding 46-50 passengers is

Varsity girls' soccer will face tough opponents on Thursday. We wish them luck in their attempts toward victory!

Girls' Soccer

Last Monday, there was much excitement in East Bridgewater where the girls' varsity soccer team mauled their opponents in a 2-1 victory.

With the help of coach Kennan Startzell, the young team proved themselves superior and played strongly throughout the entire game.

Goals were scored by forward Senior Jen Coley and Junior halfback Katie Ford, who headed the ball into the net from a corner kick.

Also playing powerfully in the halfback position were Senior Kerri Kirkendall and Juniors Katie Ryan and Kristin Ellinger. Freshman forward Corey DeSantis played well alongside Jen Coley at right wing.

Defensively, the cooperation between Freshman Anna Sandell, Senior Debbie Dormer, and Junior Cindy Dormer kept the ball in Cohasset's possession for a majority of the game.

Also, Junior goalkeeper Nancy Riley made many great saves in the net.

This week, the girls will be up against Hanover on Wednesday and on Tuesday. Oct. 6, they will travel to Whitman - Hanson.

We wish them the best of luck and if you happen to be in the neighborhood, stop by and support our team in one of their home games.

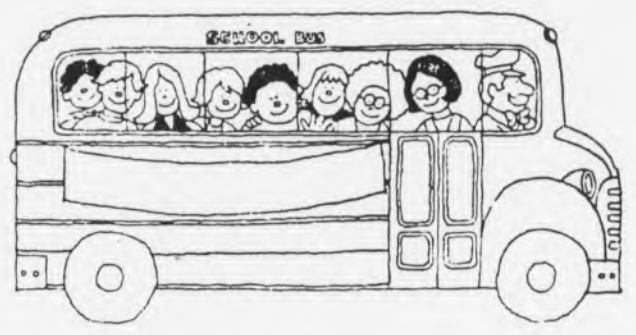
sent out on ski trips. From time to time, there could be more than one. Therefore, registrations are accepted on a first-come, first-enrolled basis, but remember, only payment for the trip holds the reservation for more than 48 hours, unless special arrangements have been made.

TRIP TIPS

The following is a check list of some helpful tips for your ski trip.



1. Bring extra dry clothes—especially gloves and socks.
2. Bring snacks for the bus trip going and coming as we generally do not make stops.
3. Bring some money for something hot to eat during the day at the mountain.
4. If renting equipment locally, make certain it fits and there are no problems with it before the trip.
5. While ski's and poles are stored under the bus in the storage compartments, it's a good idea to store your boots and gloves on the bus where they will stay warm.
6. Always dress for fairly severe cold weather regardless of the weather here. You can always take outer garments off if the weather proves warm at the mountains.
7. Any problems at the mountains—check in with the chaperones or ski patrol—they will help you.
8. Make sure your equipment/clothing is marked with your name so you do not lose it.
9. If you lose someting check with the recreation office upon returning.
10. Parents—if you are not going to be at your home phone the day of the ski trip, leave a number where you an be reached or paged in the event of an emergency.
11. All the buses have lavatories aboard.
12. Questions: call 383-6791.

Center announces bird seed sale

By Beverly Litchfield
Special to the Mariner

South Shore Natural Science Center, Norwell, announces its first bird seed sale of the season.

Everyone enjoys watching birds at their feeders. This interesting hobby has mushroomed into big business for feeders, seeds, binoculars, books and other items. What is most important, as far as birds are concerned, is a feeding station that is clean and well-stocked with appropriate food. Most any type of receptable (store-bought or homemade) is fine as long as it is near shrubs or trees, preferably in a sunny area protected from wind and rain and can be viewed from your favorite window. Hopper-type feeders are ideal because they keep the seed dry and free flowing.

The most popular seed is sunflower — either black oil or grey-striped. Cardinals, chickadees, finches, grosbeaks, nuthatches and titmice favor this type of food. Use sunflower seeds in a feeder. If you feed the mixed seed, scatter it on the ground for sparrows and mourning doves.

Water is an added attraction not only for drinking but also bathing. Some birds take a dust bath but the majority enjoy a good wet dunking! October is a good time to start feeding and enjoying the birds that are either passing through on migration to warmer climates or have reached their winter residence.

South Shore Natural Science Center is offering high quality seed at last year's low prices! Black Oil Sunflower (25lb. at $7.60; 50lb. at $14.50); Striped Sunflower (25lb. at $8.40; 50lb. at $15.75); Regular Wild Bird Mix (25 lb. at $5.35; 50lb. at $9.95); Special Wild Bird Mix (20lb. at $5.80; 40lb. at $11); Cracked Corn (25lb. at $3.95; 50lb. at $7.35); Sunflower Hearts (10lb. at $6.75; 50lb. at $32); Thistle (10lb. at 11.95).

Orders must be placed by 4 p.m. on Friday, Oct. 9 and picked up either on Saturday, Oct. 17 from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. or on Sunday, Oct. 18 from noon to 4 p.m.

Visa and Mastercharge orders may be placed by telephoning 659-2559 or 659-7525. Or stop by the Center to place an order in person! While at the Center, visit the gift shop to see a full selection of feeders, binoculars and books to help you enjoy the birds that will be visiting your yard.

Funds raised by the bird seed sales help to support the education programs of the Natural Science Center.

South Shore Natural Science Center is on Jacobs Lane, Norwell, just off Route 123 and less than five minutes from the Hanover/Route 3 interchange. The center is open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Saturday and from 1 to 4 p.m. Sundays and most holidays.

Program on healing sounds

Jonathan S. Goldman, M.A., founder and director of New England Sound Healers in Lexington and president of Spirit Music will be the featured speaker at Psi Symposium's opening fall program at First Parish Unitarian Church, 24 River St., Norwell on Sunday, Oct. 4, 7:30 p.m.

Goldman, who is a lecturing member of the International Society for Music in Medicine, says that in ancient times the use of sound and music as tools for healing was a highly developed spiritual science. This evening's talk examines the basic principles and practices of using sound and music for health and wellness, including: mantras, bioentrainment, chakra resonance and toning. Using slides, music and sonic exercises, Goldman explores the differing modalities in which sound can be utilized for creating states of enhanced wellness through stress reduction, relaxation and centering.

Goldman has mastered the art of Harmonic Singing, an ancient vocal technique practiced by Mongolian shamans and Tibetan monks in which two or more notes are chanted and sung simultaneously. He will demonstrate this technique and invite others to join him in singing "the Lost Chord."

The program is open to the public for a modest donation at the door. No previous musical knowledge or ability is required.

Constitution course

As part of the commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the signing of the constitution, 14 local high schools, including Hanover, Cohasset, Scituate , Sacred Heart and Silver Lake Regional, will participate in a national program of study, according to U.S. Rep. Gerry E. Studds (D-MA).

The program, organized through the National Commission of the Bicentennial of the Constitution, will offer teacher training and curricular materials for a special six-week course on the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. The course of study was prepared by eminent scholars, educators and officials in each of the three branches of the federal government.

"This week, we observe the bicentennial of the signing of the United States Constitution," the Congressman said. "It seems to me that the best way to honor the Constitution and help preserve its basic freedoms, is to make certain that we understand its history.

"It is my hope that careful study will afford our students an opportunity to better understand and appreciate the enduring principles of the Constitution and our national heritage," Studds said.

Art center auction chairmen Janet Faulkner (l) and Janet Amiri (r) with artist and center president Claffy Williams, present some of the work to be auctioned Oct. 17.

A wealth of learning opportunities is available to older children. Currently featured is Creative Dramatics (Tues) offering 3-6-graders and chance to grow through creative expression and social skills. In Ingenue Charm Class (Wed 4P) girls ages 9-14 gain poise, sophistication and confidence. Teens taking SAT's this year can sign up for SAT preparation courses in English and Math. These are given in October and March at Cohasset High School.

Pressed flower arranging at CCC

A class teaching the technique of pressed flower arranging will be offered at the Cohasset Community Center this fall.

Jane Ferguson and Camilla Plowden, featured in the June issue of Yankee Magazine, will be instructing the class. The ladies work for a company that has revived the 19th century tradition of pressing flowers to make beautiful framed pictures under glass. Jane and Camilla started the American branch of the family business a little over a year ago, on Commonwealth Avenue in Boston.

The process for building a picture begins with pressing the flowers for two months. Each flower is pressed separately. Large flowers, like roses, are pressed petal by petal. Small ones are pressed whole. Backgrounds of silk or velvet are chosen. Then your bouquet or picture is constructed and framed.

This class will teach you how to press flowers and use them to make stationary, bookmarks, and other gift items. All materials will be included.

The class will meet Monday evenings from 7:30 to 9:30 for six weeks. The cost is $47. Please call 383-0088 to register.

Catholic women meeting

The first gathering of the year, celebrating Catholic women, will be held Wednesday evening, Oct. 7, at the Sisters of St. Joseph Retreat House, 339 Jerusalem Road.

There will be a dinner at 6 p.m., followed by a presentation, and an opportunity for small group sharing.

The suggested donation is $10.00, and includes dinner. For reservations, call: Ms. Linda Wild, 21 Creelman Drive, Scituate, 545-5351.

Immunization requirements for school . . .

million immunizations) causes paralytic polio in the person who is vaccinated. The risk may be slightly higher in adults being vaccinated and substantially higher in persons with abnormally low resistance to infection. In extreme instances, paralytic polio may develop through close contact of a recently-vaccinated person.

The following groups should not take the oral polio vaccine without checking with a physician: anyone with cancer, leukemia or lymphoma; anyone with a lowered resistance to infection; anyone who lives in the same household with a person with the above conditions; anyone with an illness worse than a cold; pregnant women and most persons age 18 and older.

Polio Vaccine (IPV)—This is given by injection and protects the body against polio after several shots. It has no known risk of causing paralytic polio. Injectable polio vaccine is recommended for persons needing polio vaccination, who have low resistance to serious infection, or who live with persons with low resistance to serious infection. It is not widely used in the United States.

Measles, Mumps and Rubella—These vaccines are given by injection to children after their first birthday; measles vaccine should be given at 15 months of age or older. Measles, mumps and rubella vaccine can be given one at a time, or in a combined vaccine, MR (measles-rubella) or MMR (measles, mumps rubella). If they are given in a combined vaccine, the child should be 15 months or older.

Experts recommend that adolescents and adults—especially women of childbearing age—who are not known to be immune to rubella, should receive the rubella vaccine. Women should not receive the shot if they are pregnant or might become pregnant within the next three months.

About one in seven children who get rubella vaccine will develop a rash or some swelling of the glands in the neck, one to two weeks after this shot. About one in every 20 children who get rubella vaccine will have some aching or swelling of the joints. This may happen anywhere from one to three weeks after the shot. It usually only lasts two or three days.

The following groups should not take these vaccines without checking with a physician: anyone sick with something more serious than a cold; anyone who has had a serious allergic reaction to eggs (does not apply to rubella vaccine); anyone with cancer, leukemia or lymphoma; anyone with a lowered resistance to infection; anyone who has received a gamma globuline within the preceding three months; and anyone who has had a serious allergic reaction to neomycin.

These are some of the most common immunizations. All children should be immunized as recommended to prevent the risk of developing a potentially life-threatening illness. The vaccines are remarkably effective and readily available at low cost. For additional information on childhood immunizations with regard to your child, contact your personal physician.

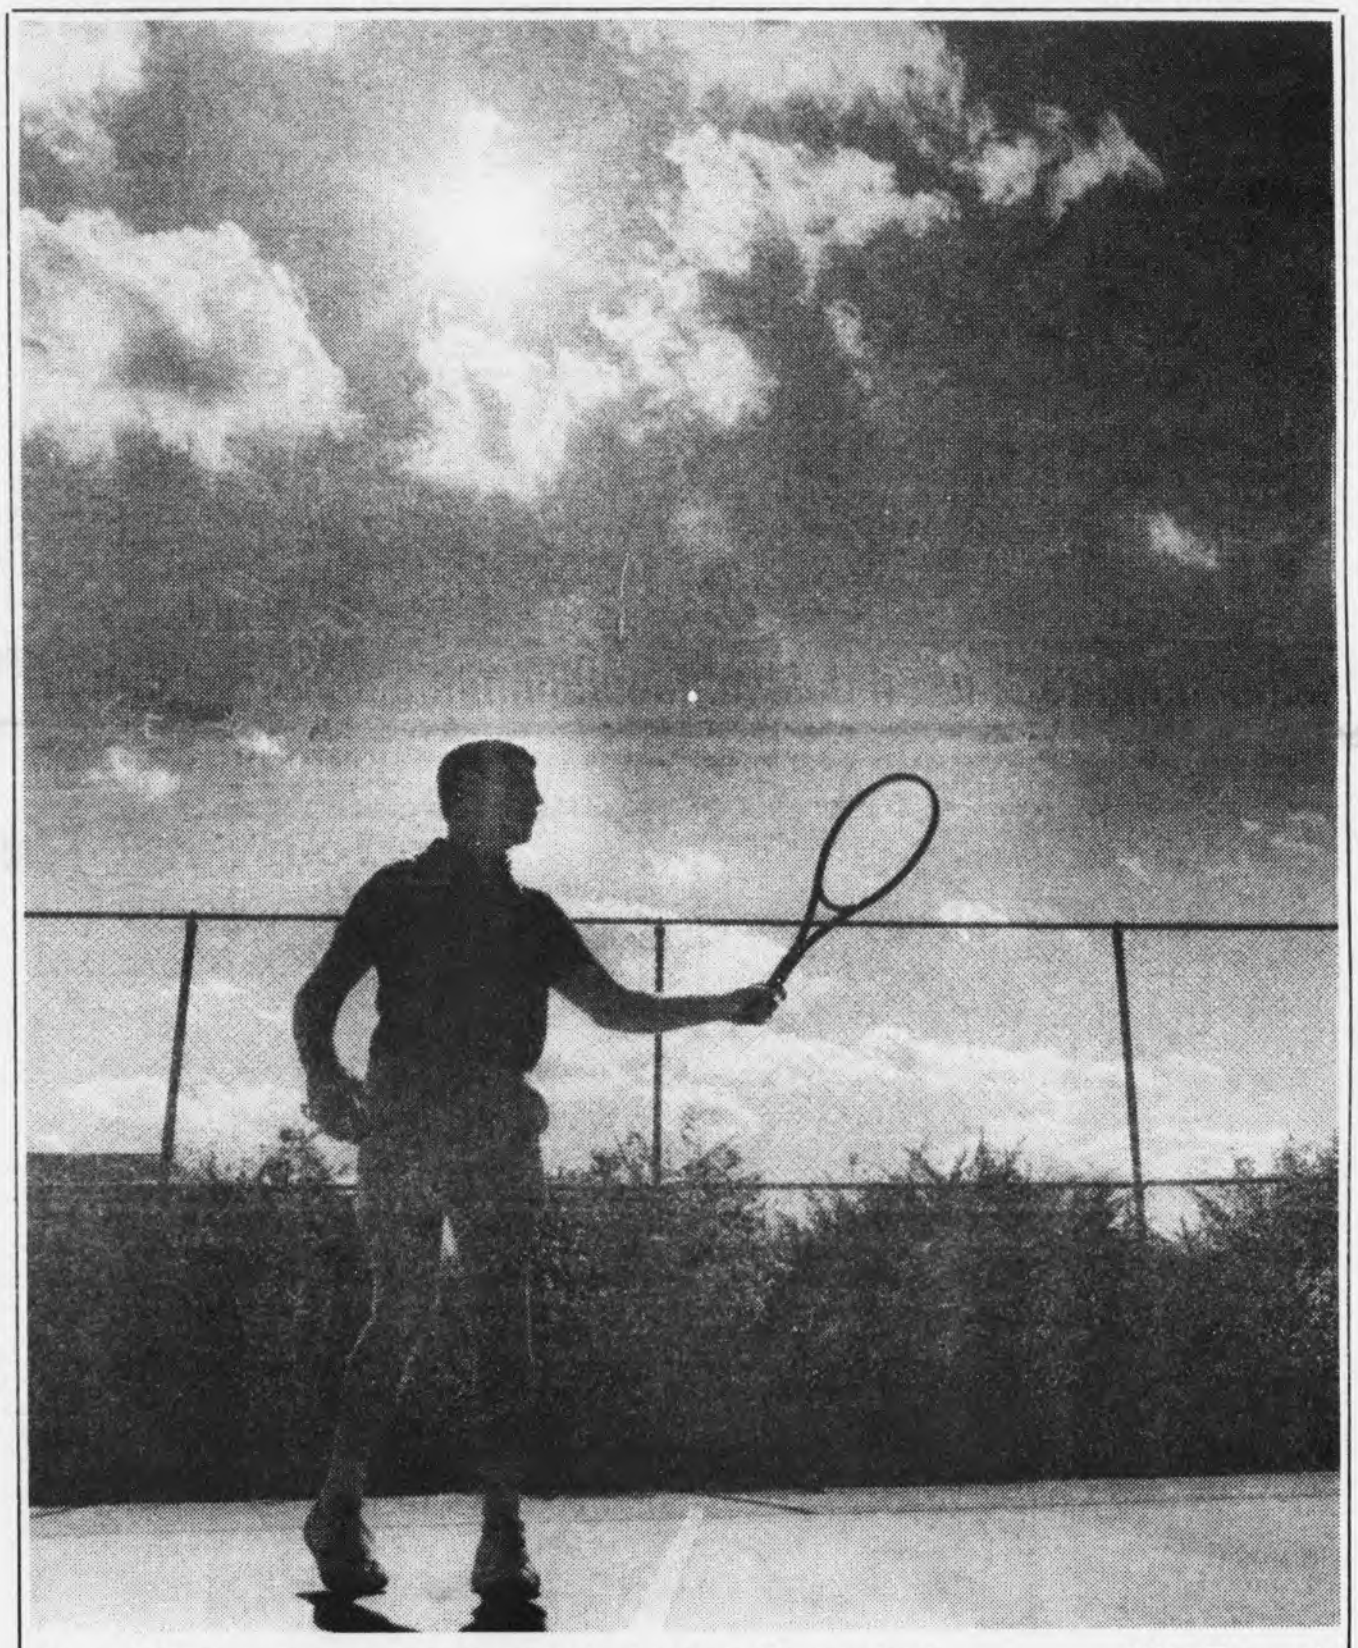
Conservation says no to Evergreen access

By Jane Lane
Mariner staff

Based upon testimony from its engineer, the conservation commission will withdraw its participation in a town meeting article regarding property off Evergreen Lane.

The commission's engineer, Bob Maki, said that access from a proposed three-house development off Rte. 3A to Evergreen Lane would be "three times worse than entering from the Rte. 3A crossing."

The planning board had suggested that developer Paul Ferrini pursue a possible access from the less-traveled Evergreen Lane rather than a Rte. 3A location which is close to the new Stop and Shop location.



The suggestion was complicated because the access land is currently controlled by the school department. The school committee agreed, at the request of the planning board and the conservation commission, to include an article in the Oct. 26 special town meeting which would transfer a 40-feet by 160-feet parcel to Ferrini in exchange for a similar-sized piece of land off Rte. 3A.

According to engineer Maki, "the new drive is unacceptable as far as the wetlands protection act is concerned."

That pleased a group of twenty abuttors who attended both the Monday night school committee meeting and the Tuesday night conservation commission, to express their displeasure with the proposed Evergreen Lane access plan.

The conservation commission continued their hearing

State blames planning board for housing woes

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

The letter came. It wasn't a surprise. It was expected. But now it is here and town officials aren't quite sure what to do.

The letter is a three page harangue from the Executive Office of Communities & Development (EOCD), explaining the history of Cohasset's inability to comply with the fair housing standards of the state, and finally the notice that the EOCD has "directed all state agencies to withhold discretionary grants from the town until this determination has been withdrawn."

This official reprimand will temporarily forfeit the grant for the 2.6 million dollar sewer project that the town intended to apply toward the Ward Sewer Plant.

"It has now happened," said Executive Secretary Donald Andrew to the selectmen . "As for discretionary funds, don't even waste your time filling out the application," he told selectman at the Oct. 5 meeting.

"It is serious enough that we have to do something as soon as possible," added Andrew.

It was clear where Selectman Jim Gallagher felt the blame for this problem lies. "The planning board has been dragging their feet," said Gallagher.

Presently the housing authority and selectmen have been waiting for the planning board to come up with another proposal for an agreement with the EOCD.

The last agreement was submitted to the EOCD on Aug. 21 without the signatures of the planning board. In a meeting called directly after that, the planning board drafted a revision.

In the letter the EOCD assistant secretary said; "The planning board has since insisted on making changes to the proposed agreement that would make it difficult for Cohasset to develop low-income family housing or to implement zoning changes that promote affordable housing. The agreement now proposed by the planning board is completely unacceptable to the EOCD."

Planning board chairman Robert Sturdy had yet to see the letter from the state and was in attendance at Mondays selectmen's meeting.

"I'm still waiting to see the letter," said Sturdy. "Our agreement was turned down without direct comment. I have not talked with anyone from the state," who felt that the state had failed in communications with his board, he added.

Town Meeting to decide fate of $1.1 million project

Article 16 at the Oct. 26 special town meeting is a 1.1 million dollar item for an addition to the Cohasset police/fire station. The money will be used for renovations, improvements, the purchasing of furnishings and equipment and costs incurred in the engineering and design.

"We reviewed five sets of plans," said Diane Sullivan of the police/fire station renovation study committee. "The committee had a unanimous vote, we are very comfortable with this."

Sullivan explained that the that 1.1 million article will either be voted in by town meeting or it will be defeated. At this point there is no midpoint between the planned renovation and a negative vote at town meeting which would halt further plans.

A negative vote at town meeting could leave the police and fire department in a sticky legal position. Presently the one woman police officer is using a juvenile detention area as a locker room. Although no grievences have been filed it is a problem that is not going to disappear.

"It is inevitable that the fire department will face the same problem," said Sullivan.

Space is a major factor in the proposed renovations. At the last town meeting funds were approved for a new fire engine.

"Selectmen thought that the money was for a replacement fire engine but in fact it wasn't," said Sullivan. Now they need room to park it. They can't leave it outdoors."

The plans inlclude an additional bay for parking another truck.

"We decided to go ahead with the additional bay. It will be cheaper for the town to do this while we are in construction," said Sullivan.

The police and fire station committee was formed by the selectmen to evaluate both acute and long term needs of the station. Plans have been prepared by Putnam &

American Cablesystems proposes change of studio

The Cohasset Community Television Council is reviewing a proposal by American Cablesystems to merge the Cohasset cable studio with Scituate and Hull.

The new facility would be located in North Scituate, according to Stephen Farquhar, general manager of American Cablesystems. Before any plan is implemented, American Cablesytems will have to prepare an amended contract which must be approved by selectmen.

According to Farquhar, the new North Scituate site is capable of accommodating the combined office and studio staffs of the existing three facilities, "while offering much larger and better equipped production and editing areas along with longer operating hours."

The office business hours will be extended to 8:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. weekdays and 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturdays. There will be additional incoming telephone capacity, and the combined office would be staffed by seven office persons. There will also be more video training workshops, according to the general manager.

The Cohasset cable council plans to survey all active cable volunteers for their reactions to this plan. The council members will also talk with cable council chairpersons from Hingham, Hanover and Norwell to get their reaction to the recent merging of the three facilities in those towns.

According to John Packard, chairman of the Cohasset cable council, their two major concerns are "to improve the quality and amount of community television production and to answer all legal contractual requirements in the spirit and letter of the amended proposal originally approved by the town."

Packard said the local cable council will be able to make a recommendation to selectmen after they meet Oct. 27

John F. Langmaid memorial fund

A fund in memory of John F. Langmaid III has been established to benefit students in the Cohasset school system. The fund will be used to encourage students' participation in and appreciation of music.

Jack was committed to the education of young people in Cohasset and was a member of the school committee from 1977 to 1986, serving as vice chairman for seven years. Interested in the athletic as well as the academic development of children, Jack started the street hockey program in Cohasset.

Contributions can be sent to the John F. Langmaid III Memorial Fund, c/o Cohasset High School, 143 Pond Street, Cohasset 02025.

School board meeting

The next scheduled meeting of the Cohasset School Committee is Monday, Oct.19 at 8 p.m. at the high school.

Offices closed Oct. 12

State, county and municipal offices will be closed Monday, Oct. 12, Columbus Day.

Liquor stores, taverns and bars will be open but retail stores, supermarkets, schools, banks and post offices will be closed all day.

New parking policy adopted

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

Cohasset will soon be famous for more than Minots Light, its fine restaurants and scenic charm. Cohasset will soon become notorious to many Massachusetts residents as the place not to park a car.

Selectmen adopted a parking policy at this week's meeting that will force anyone in the state of Massachusetts with more than one outstanding ticket to get a note from the Cohasset town hall if one of those tickets happened to have been written in Cohasset. The price for this note to the registry will be $10. Without the note from the Town Hall, citizens will not be able to renew their license or their registration.

"We're being deprived of a revenue," said Executive Secretary Donald Andrew, who presented the idea to selectmen.

The parking ticket system as it stands today is not complicated. After a motorist gets a ticket he has 21 days to either pay the ticket or file an appeal.

"I have not had an appeal yet," said Andrew.

If the ticket is not payed within 21 days the driver gets a final notice with a $5 charge tacked on for lateness.

This is where Cohasset comes in. If that final notice is not payed in 30 days, Cohasset sends in a note to the Registry of Motor Vehicles and when that motorist comes in to renew his lisence a computer somewhere waives a flag and the unlucky motorist must face the wrath of the treasury department of the Town Hall.

It makes no difference whether the driver is from Scituate or Springfield. They must report, $10 in hand, to the Town Hall. Cohasset ultimately receives its money for the overdue ticket from the Registry unless the motorist decides that it is not worth the red tape and he moves out of state.

"There is approximately $30,000 worth of tickets on the books right now," said Andrew, "and we'd like to get that back."

"That is one heck of a nuisance," said selectmen Jim Gallagher, who admitted to having never received a parking ticket in Massachusetts.

Andrew explained that the $10 fine levied by Cohasset is to pay for having the releases being printed up, the extra work for the town hall employees and for, "some incentive for people to pay on time."

"You have to do this because people ignore them (the tickets), " said selectmen Martha Gjesteby.

The motion passed 3-0; Gjesteby, Gallagher and Burt Pratt voting unanimously. Board chairman Rocco Laugelle was unable to attend Monday's meeting. Executive Secretary Andrew reported that he was in western Massachusetts as part of an emergency repair team fixing electrical wires damaged by the freak blizzard. Vice chairman Cliff Mitman was also unable to attend Monday's meeting.

"People need the encouragement," added Andrew, who recalled one day in May when one police officer handed out 250 tickets at Sandy Beach.

"I knew immediately because of all the calls we received," said Andrew.

News briefs

Street change

Selectmen must notify the state if the Oct. 26 special town meeting decides to make King Street one-way. And if selectmen intend to exclude truck traffic from that street or reduce the speed limit, they must file a request with the state Department of Public Works.

The town counsel informed selectmen that the DPW has exclusive jurisdiction over speed limit requests and truck and weight exclusion requests on state highways and town road. According to Henderson, because the state is in the process of redesigning the intersection at Rte. 3A and King Street, selectmen should notify the DPW if the article creating a one-way street on King Street is approved Oct. 26.

Librarian raise

Town counsel recently ruled that librarian Richard Hayes is entitled to the step raise increase as approved by the trustees of the Paul Pratt Library.

According to Atty. Richard Henderson, based on research and discussions he has conducted, Hayes is entitled to the step raise increase and the personnel committee must approve it.

In a letter to selectmen, Atty. Henderson noted that Hayes must be paid the step raise retroactively to the date which he was entitled, July 1. He stated that the trustees must certify that they have complied with the procedure prescribed by the personnel committee, and based on those procedural steps, conclude that Hayes is entitled to a step raise.

He informed the personnel committee that if they have received that certification from the trustees and determined that Hayes is entitled to a raise, then the personnel committee must approve the increase.

Old Colony R.R. could create more tie-ups

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

MBTA project manager Steve Polechronis had some good news and some bad news for members of the citizens advisory committee of the Old Colony Railroad rehabilitation project at the Sept. 30 meeting.

The bad news was a Boston Globe article pointing out some downsides of the economical aspects of the Old Colony R.R. plan.

"We are disappointed that the writer has taken this position,"said Polechronis. "We have lost some ground. We have to forge ahead on the environmental issues right now. It is important to note that the Old Colony Railroad still has to be reviewed on its merits."

Polechronis explained that Massachusetts funds most of its projects in two year intervals.

"In 1984-85 the state kicked in 90 cents for every federal dollar," said Polechronis. He further explained that in 1986-87 the state chipped in $1.20 for every state dollar and in 1988-89 they plan to contribute $2.15. The government requires a 50 percent commitment of state and local funds to consider a project of this magnatude.

"As a state, Massachusetts has done a great job of funding projects." said Polechronis. "We have to convince the legislature that 50 percent funding is sufficient."

The good news, which far outweighed the bad news for rail supporters, was that the state is hopeful that it will be receiving federal money for the South Shore rail line.

Polechronis reported that the federal office for under the surface transportation in Washington, D.C., has two new requirements.

"One requirement is that 40 percent of new money must be spent on major funding projects," said Polechronis, "projects like the Old Colony Railroad."

The UMTA office in Washington, D.C., must rank each project on cost effectiveness and report that to Congress.

"They want the Old Colony project in the ranking," said Polechronis. "We expected that federal and state governments were very far apart. We want to delay submitting the DEIR/DEIS documents."

Polechronis explained that the slowing down of the state process to meet the federal process is consistent with their schedule. If approved, work on the Greenbush line through Hingham and Cohasset to Scituate, would not begin until construction of a Neponsent River bridge is in progress.

"The ranking is based on a cost effectiveness analysis," said Polechronis. He also stressed that an important issue at this time was to,"get a sense of the environmental issues."

Environmental issues have become paramount in the ongoing discussions with local boards.

In a report on a recent meeting with Hingham officials Polechronis admitted that estimates for the amount of walk-in passengers were too high. Presently the MBTA is considering two sites in Hingham. One in West Hingham near the Hingham Country Club and another site in south Hingham to be called Nantasket Junction. Parking space for 131 cars is planned in the West Hingham site. Parking for 200 cars is allotted for Nantasket Junction. Polechronis explained that some environmental issues still have to be hammered out with local boards.

Another report authored by Richard Cook of the citiznes advisory committee made it appear, in his own words, as if he and Mr. Polechronis wewe attending separate meetings.

"We're designing a facility for the seventh year of its existence," said Cook. "This is not wise. We are undershooting the principal concern of the traffic."

Cook raised some of the outstanding issues that he felt that the T couldn't answer at the Hingham meetings. The major issue is the amount of intersections in the Hingham area that would be blocked when the train came through.

"For at least one minute all of the intersections would be completely blocked," said Cook. "This would completely obstruct traffic. Virtually traffic would come to a standstill for one minute and then it would take minutes for it to dissipate. The kind of impact that would have on the business district we would be concerned about."

Cook also raised citizens' concerns about the lack of information that available to the towns.

"There are some voluminous documents but we don't know if the conclusions are correct. This process has been going on for a year and a half. The T should be sharing more information with the community.

The subject of Hingham selectmen Ed Lewicki's request for a technical analysis of Route 3 as a possible alternative or supplement to the Old Colony project was also addressed by Polechronis at advisory committee meeting.

"We looked at the market served," said Polechronis. "Route 3 rather than Greenbush would not serve the same communities. Studies have indicated conclusively that the South Shore is ill served by the the Route 3 alignment. Mr. Lewicki was unhappy with this," continued Polechronis, "he wanted a more indepth study. My answer to him was simply that it is not a viable investment of public dollars. It just doesn't serve the same set of people."

Polechronis said that discussion will continue with Hingham boards and that he will be prepared to discuss cost, ridership analysis as well as other problems and alluded to the fact that he wanted to leave the Route 3 issue behind.

"Mr. Lewicki had a reasonable alternative," said Cook. "I think that we can provide him with some rough figures."

Polechronis agreed that in the future the state may want to look at adding a fourth corridor to the expressway.

"The additional effort is worth satisfying Mr. Lewicki so we can move on to another issue," said Cook.

A report from Richard Bowen of the advisory committtee was read to members of the board concerning a recent meeting in Scituate. The gathering was a private meeting of residents of Kathy's Path and Gridley Bryant Road, in Scituate. Opponents of the Greenbush line raised questions pertaining to the noise factors, the safety aspects and the effect on property values that the Railroad will bring.

"The T should address these concerns," said Polechronis, "It will be useful to look at the mitigation of any of the railroads negative impacts."

Affordable housing award to S.S. Coalition

By Judy Enright
Mariner staff

State and local officials gathered in Norwell town hall last Wednesday for the ceremonial awarding of a $50,000 grant to the South Shore Coalition.

The grant, presented by Richard Howe, Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Executive Office of Communities and Development (EOCD), will enable Coalition towns - including Norwell, Hanover, Cohasset, Duxbury, Hingham, Hull, Marshfield, Rockland, Scituate and Weymouth - to plan for growth and work on development of regional approaches to affordable housing.

A housing task force will be established (with members appointed by local boards of selectmen) to serve as a central planning group for the membership region and to balance affordable housing needs and environmental concerns.

Howe told the gathering that there were three times as many applications for the grant money as his department could fund. There was $1-million available this year and 96 applications, which requested more than $2.8 million. A total of $810,750 in grants was approved. The remaining $189,250 in fiscal year 1988 funds (up from $550,000 a year in Fiscal Years 1986 and 1987) will be available throughout the remainder of the year in planning grants.

"The economic health of Massachusetts has resulted in rapid growth in every region of the state," Howe commented. "Increasingly, cities and towns are recognizing the importance of planning for housing and economic development. What this program does is provide valuable resources for these communities so they can confront the issues that increased development can present."

Rep. Frank Hynes, (D-Marshfield), commented that the median price for houses in this area is about $165,000. Many children, who grew up on the South Shore, cannot afford to return to their home towns when they marry and are looking for a place to settle with their families. "This (grant) will provide some solutions to the housing crunch," Hynes said.

David Soule, executive director of the Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC), complimented the Coalition and cited the cooperation between that group and his agency as "exemplary." He added, "wherever I go, traffic and housing are the two problems that we have to deal with."

Howe said the Coalition grant application provided "just the right approach to the balanced needs of affordable housing and environmental planning. I'm pleased that this organization is playing such an important part in meeting these challenges."

Janet O'Brien, a Hanover selectman and Chairman of the Coalition, accepted the grant on behalf of the Coalition. "The goal of affordable housing will move forward with this," she said. She especially thanked MAPC for their support and technical assistance and the efforts of local folks who implement the objectives. She also thanked the town of Norwell for hosting the Coalition office.

Sen. William B. Golden, (D-Weymouth), thanked Amy Anthony, State Secretary of Communities and Development, who he said had "a particular commitment" to the South Shore Coalition. Golden reminisced about a letter he sent in 1985 to South Shore selectmen, prior to formation of the Coalition, "to say if they worked together, they would attract more resources. This is a concrete example of how this works. We have been able to realize the dream of a regional organization working closely with officials at the state level who want programs that are effective."

Rep. Hynes thanked O'Brien and cited the work of many state and local officials, including Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, (R-Cohasset), and Rep. William J. Flynn, Jr., (D-Hanover), for helping secure the grant. "This is a good example of teamwork on a problem that is extremely important in this area - affordable housing." He added that communities should have input into affordable housing plans at an early stage.

Hynes added that the grant marked "the rite of passage of the South Shore Coalition from a fledgling group to a full-fledged, well-organized group of people who recognize the needs of their communities and work together to find solutions."

He added that the grant would not have been possible without the support of Gov. Michael Dukakis or Secretary Anthony. "Gov. Dukakis is deeply committed and his efforts are inspiring to all who've worked with him to achieve the goals he's established, particularly in the area of affordable housing."

Those who also attended the grant presentation were: Norwell Executive Secretary Annette Sexton; Katherine Bartolini, director of the Office of Local and Regional Planning for EOCD; Mark Siegenthaler, director of strategic planning, EOCD; David Soule, regional director of MAPC; Jim Clarke, Weymouth planning director; Mike Embury, Rockland executive secretary.

The proposal says that a Housing Task Force would work with a housing consultant and Coalition staffers to develop equitable ways of creating affordable housing throughout the region.

The consultant will be charged with varied duties, including: creating a set of environmentally sound criteria against which to measure all affordable housing proposals; reviewing land use regulations and policies in each town to learn what obstacles might be in the way of realizing the goal of affordable housing; formulating a simplified and standardized permit approval process for town's to use for affordable housing proposals, and a voluntary development review process for residential and non-residential projects of regional impact; investigating formation and funding of a Regional Housing Trust (which all Coalition town's town meetings must ratify) to act like a Land Bank and be able to buy and hold land suitable for construction of affordable housing in each of the towns; exploring ways to finance such land purchases, being sensitive to local concerns and objectives and balancing them against area needs and perspectives as a regional housing stategy is formulated.

Any proposals that receive Coalition endorsement will be presented to the local communities for their individual approval or action.

One of the Task Force's main objectives will be to increase acceptance of affordable housing, through open communication and responsiveness to local concerns.

Conservation Commission stands up for wetlands

By Bob Tis
Mariner staff

It is not easy to get anything by the conservation commission. This was certainly the case at their Tuesday meeting when they asked many local residents for notices of intent in order to protect local wetlands.

Josephine McMahon and Stephen Floyd came before the board on Tuesday night to discuss the proposed construction of three office buildings slated for the property directly across the triangle on 3A adjacent to the Rosano property. One office building would take over a large foundation that sits vacant facing the highway. The foundation was at one time installed for a bank.

Conservation members asked the represenitives of McMahon, Wallace and Floyd Associates to file a notice of intent regarding the drainaige and the already present pipes on their combined 6 3/4 acre property.

"We like to know where the pipes are," said chairman Merle Brown. He added that, the large amount of construction on that hill could present problems.

"All of these flows added up are going to make some changes," Brown added. "We like to have some control over that."

The board suggested that the builders work closely with the board in the installation of a water retention area that had been planned for the property. The conservation commission also prepared the builders to prepare drainage systems for a hundered year flood.

"We don't want you sliding down the hill," said one board member.

John Hagerty appeared before the board in a routine matter to seek approval to fill in pot holes in the parking lot of his harbor business. In discussion with board members it was discovered that one of the proposed signs for his furniture company was in danger of violating wetlands protection acts.

After approving Hagerty's request to fill pot holes with crushed stone over the next three years, one conservation member asked him in a offhand manner where he planned to put his new sign. The conservation commissioners look of surprise was undescribable when the answer to their question was; "in the marsh."

Hagerty was requested to file a notice of intent and to reappear before the board.

A similar reaction of surprise was registered by Kevin Lewis when he found out about the red tape involved in improving his Heather Drive property.

"I just want to improve my property," said Lewis who is interested in removing brush and trees from his yard and constructing a traditional backyard.

Lewis was informed that it was necessary to file a notice of intent to change property with any proximity to wetlands or when a sufficient amount of fill is being added to the property.

Filing a notice of intent costs twenty-five dollars and requires paperwork that is viewed by the Conservation commision, the DEQE and the board of health. Space must also be taken out for advertising the subsequent hearing in the local newspaper at the filers expense. In short there is quite a bit of time, effort and money involed in changing any property in Cohasset.

Housing woes

"They say we are unduly restrictive and that certainly is not the case," continued Sturdy.

Gallagher informed Sturdy that he had in fact been at a meeting with Ms. Anna Perez of the EOCD.

"She was not in a decision making capacity," explained Sturdy.

Gallagher accused Sturdy's board of, "badgering" Ms. Perez during the late August meeting.

"I would have walked out of that meeting if I were her," said Gallagher. "You tried to cut her short at every opportunity."

"We ought to try and work together," continued Gallagher. "We have lost all of our state funding.

Executive Secretary Andrew is now trying to coordinate a meeting between the housing authority, the planning board, the selectmen and the fair housing committee.

"The planning board has taken a stand," said selectmen Burt Pratt, "and the awkward position that I happen to be in, is that I agree with them."

The history of the towns problems with the EOCD go back to an agreement signed in December of 1983. The selectmen, the planning board and the housing authority agreed to a four part agreement: 1) To submit an application for scattered-site family housing funds; 2) to pursue other state and federal housing assistance programs; 3) to support the expidited development of Chapter 705 housing by the Cohasset housing authority; or, 4) to propose zoning changes that encourage development of affordable housing.

The EOCD advised town boards that they were in danger of losing state discretionary funds for the first time on April 16,1986. The selectmen agreed in May of 1986 to submit a revised housing plan to ensure Cohasset's eligibility.

According to the EOCD, the town of Cohasset was given its final notice to comply with Executive Order 215 on May 15, 1987.

An agreement submitted by Andrew on July 3, 1987 was, "acceptable to EOCD with only minor revisions," according to the state.

This is as close as the town would come. An extention was granted by the EOCD and an agreement that the town of Cohasset would go foward in good faith towards viable solutions to encourage low-income housing was submitted to the EOCD on Aug. 21, 1987 without the signatures of the planning board. The revised agreement, submitted weeks later, with the planning boards signatures, was found to be unacceptable.

The EOCD states, "no commitments made by the Town to EOCD have been fulfilled in a timely or acceptable manner. No other significant actions have been fully supported by Town officials to adress Cohasset's housing needs. For these reasons, (and those outlined in earlier letters) EOCD has determined that the Town of Cohasset is 'unreasonably restrictive' of low and moderate income housing pursuant to Executive Order 215."

Cohasset is bound by this verdict until they show the EOCD that they have made, "significant efforts to redirect its policies toward the development of affordable housing."

Need to listen

Wednesday, Oct. 7, the Board of Health and the Social Service League were co-sponsors of a seminar on AIDS. Announcements of the panel discussion were made well in advance. We can only hope that people paid attention.

Because the Mariner was published before the AIDS seminar was held Wednesday night, we cannot state whether the event was well-attended and well-received.

Nevertheless, we will state that this seminar was an important event for Cohasset and surrounding communities. And we heartily congratulate the local officials who worked to bring this vital topic to the public, most notably Public Health Nurse Mary Anne Hansen.

It was she who attended a similar successful seminar in Newton this past summer. Together with Health Agent Joseph Godzik, they worked to schedule expert speakers for the Cohasset event.

We hope their efforts were not fruitless, as was the case last week in Hanson. A forum on this timely and sensitive subject drew only 15 residents there. As one Hanson resident stated, "If there was a known case of someone in Hanson with AIDS, this room would be full. Panic, mass hysteria will occur unless we get the message out there that it (AIDS) is not casually transmitted."

Working to obtain expert speakers on the topic, Nurse Hansen admitted the topic could scare away an audience. It is a sensitive, personal, and scary subject, she agreed.

But, she emphasized, it is precisely that lack of knowledge by the public rather than their awareness of the subject, that makes AIDS a dangerous disease. AIDS, Hansen stated, is a preventable disease. Unlike most other ailments, there are distinct ways we can avoid contracting this terminal disease.

The public must be aware that indiscriminate sex, be it homosexual or heterosexual, leads to possible infection by this deadly virus. The use of dirty hypodermic needles is the other method of contracting AIDS.

And that is it. Uninfected persons do not catch the disease from public toilets, handshakes with an AIDS patient, swimming in public pools, or from a mosquito bite.

And perhaps more than the parents of this community, our children must be taught more about this disease. We hope Wednesday's seminar was heard by the adolescents of this town, the future generation whose numbers could be greatly diminished by this modern day plague.

We cannot close our ears and shut our eyes to this fearsome social enemy. We all need to be educated and to intelligently communicate that knowledge. With false information we are defenseless. With sound facts, we can work toward an AIDS-less future.

The title of the Cohasset seminar was, "AIDS Affects Us All." Not in the literal, physical term, but in a more philosophical manner, this dreaded disease certainly does affect us all. This horrible illness is indiscriminately killing friends and relatives, and it will take away many more lives.

Not until we become educated about this disease can we work to prevent it. Our lives will indeed be affected until it is stopped.

We congratulate the local health board and the Social Service League for taking that first brave step.

EOCD explains housing policy

(This letter was written to Selectmen from the Assistant Secretary of the Executive Office of Communities and Development. Ed.)

To the Editor

I am writing regarding housing policies in the Town of Cohasset as they relate to Executive Order 215.

As you are probably aware, Massachusetts faces a significant shortage of housing that is affordable to low and moderate income households. It is the Commonwealth's policy to bring each community's attention to the need for an increased supply of affordable housing and to encourage each city and town to better meet its own housing needs.

Executive Order 215 directs EOCD to review the housing policies of all applicants for state discretionary funds. It further directs all state agencies to withhold awards of discretionary funding from communities which, after review, are determined by EOCD to have local practices, policies or regulations that unreasonably exclude the development of housing for low and moderate income households. EOCD may waive such a determination if a community has developed or agrees to develop, a specific strategy to facilitate the development of affordable housing.

For well over a year, the Executive Office of Communities and Development (EOCD) has expressed serious concern to theTown of Cohasset regarding the Town's non-compliance with a Memorandum of Agreement that the Selectmen, Planning Board and Housing Authority had executed with EOCD in December 1983. The enclosed letters document the Town's failure to fulfill any of the four commitments it had made nearly four years ago to EOCD: (1) to submit a complete application for state Chapter 705 scattered-site family public housing funds; (2) to pursue other state and federal housing assistance programs; (3) to support the expedited development of Chapter 705 housing by the Cohasset Housing Authority; or, (4) to propose zoning changes that encourage development of affordable housing.

Letters

EOCD had advised the Cohasset Board of Selectmen on April 16, 1986 that the Town was in danger of losing state discretionary grants because it had failed to fulfill its commitments made pursuant to Executive Order 215. The Board of Selectmen and Executive Secretary agreed on May 13, 1986 to submit a revised housing plan to EOCD to ensure the Town's continued eligibility for state grant funds. Despite EOCD's willingness to negotiate a revised agreement with Cohasset last year, the Town did not submit a new housing plan and did not explain its failure to do so.

On May 15, 1987, the Town of Cohasset was given a final opportunity to comply with Executive Order 215 by negotiating a new Memorandum of Agreement with EOCD within 30 days. Once again, the Town failed to respond in any manner. At the request of Senator William Golden, however, this agency postponed its determination on June 15, 1987 to allow a meeting betweed EOCD staff and town officials in Cohasset on June 23, 1987. At that meeting, which included representatives of the Selectmen, Planning Board, Housing Authority and Fair Housing Committee, EOCD was assured that the Town would submit an acceptable Memorandum of Agreement to EOCD within ten days.

An agreement was submitted by the Town's Executive Secretary as promised on Friday, July 3, 1987 and I advised the Town that it was acceptable to EOCD with only minor revisions. I was assured by the Town that the revised agreement would be returned to EOCD with all required signatures by July 24, 1987. By mutual agreement this date was then extended by four weeks to allow adequate local review. The agreement was finally submitted to EOCD on August 21, 1987 but without the required signatures of the Cohasset Planning

Social Service League grant

The Social Service League of Cohasset has been selected by South Shore Elder Services, the Area Agency on Aging, to receive Title III B Federal funds to continue its Geriatric Counseling Service to residents of Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Norwell and Scituate.

Geriatric Counseling is available to those 60 years or older and their families. For the past seven years this program has offered office and home visits for elders experiencing significant social isolation, anxiety, depression, cognitive impairment, chronic and life threatening illness, and other life crises related to aging.

Social workers, Carolyn Housman, LICSW and Judy Basmajian LCSW, are geriatric specialists who have worked for home health agencies, nursing homes and in community service. Elders needing their assistance can call them at the League office 383-0771.

The Social Service League supports three-fourths of the cost of this counseling service. The League has been an active volunteer organization for 75 years. Operating funds are obtained from community service contracts, fees, donations and proceeds from the Cohasset Consignment Shop at Cushing Plaza, which operates solely for the benefit of the League.

Town hall construction to start

By Jane Lane
Mariner staff

Groundbreaking on the $1.1 million town hall addition should begin by November.

The contract for general construction of the addition was awarded Monday night to A.P. Whitaker and Sons of Bridgewater. The $995,000 amount was the lowest among the four companies that bid on the project.

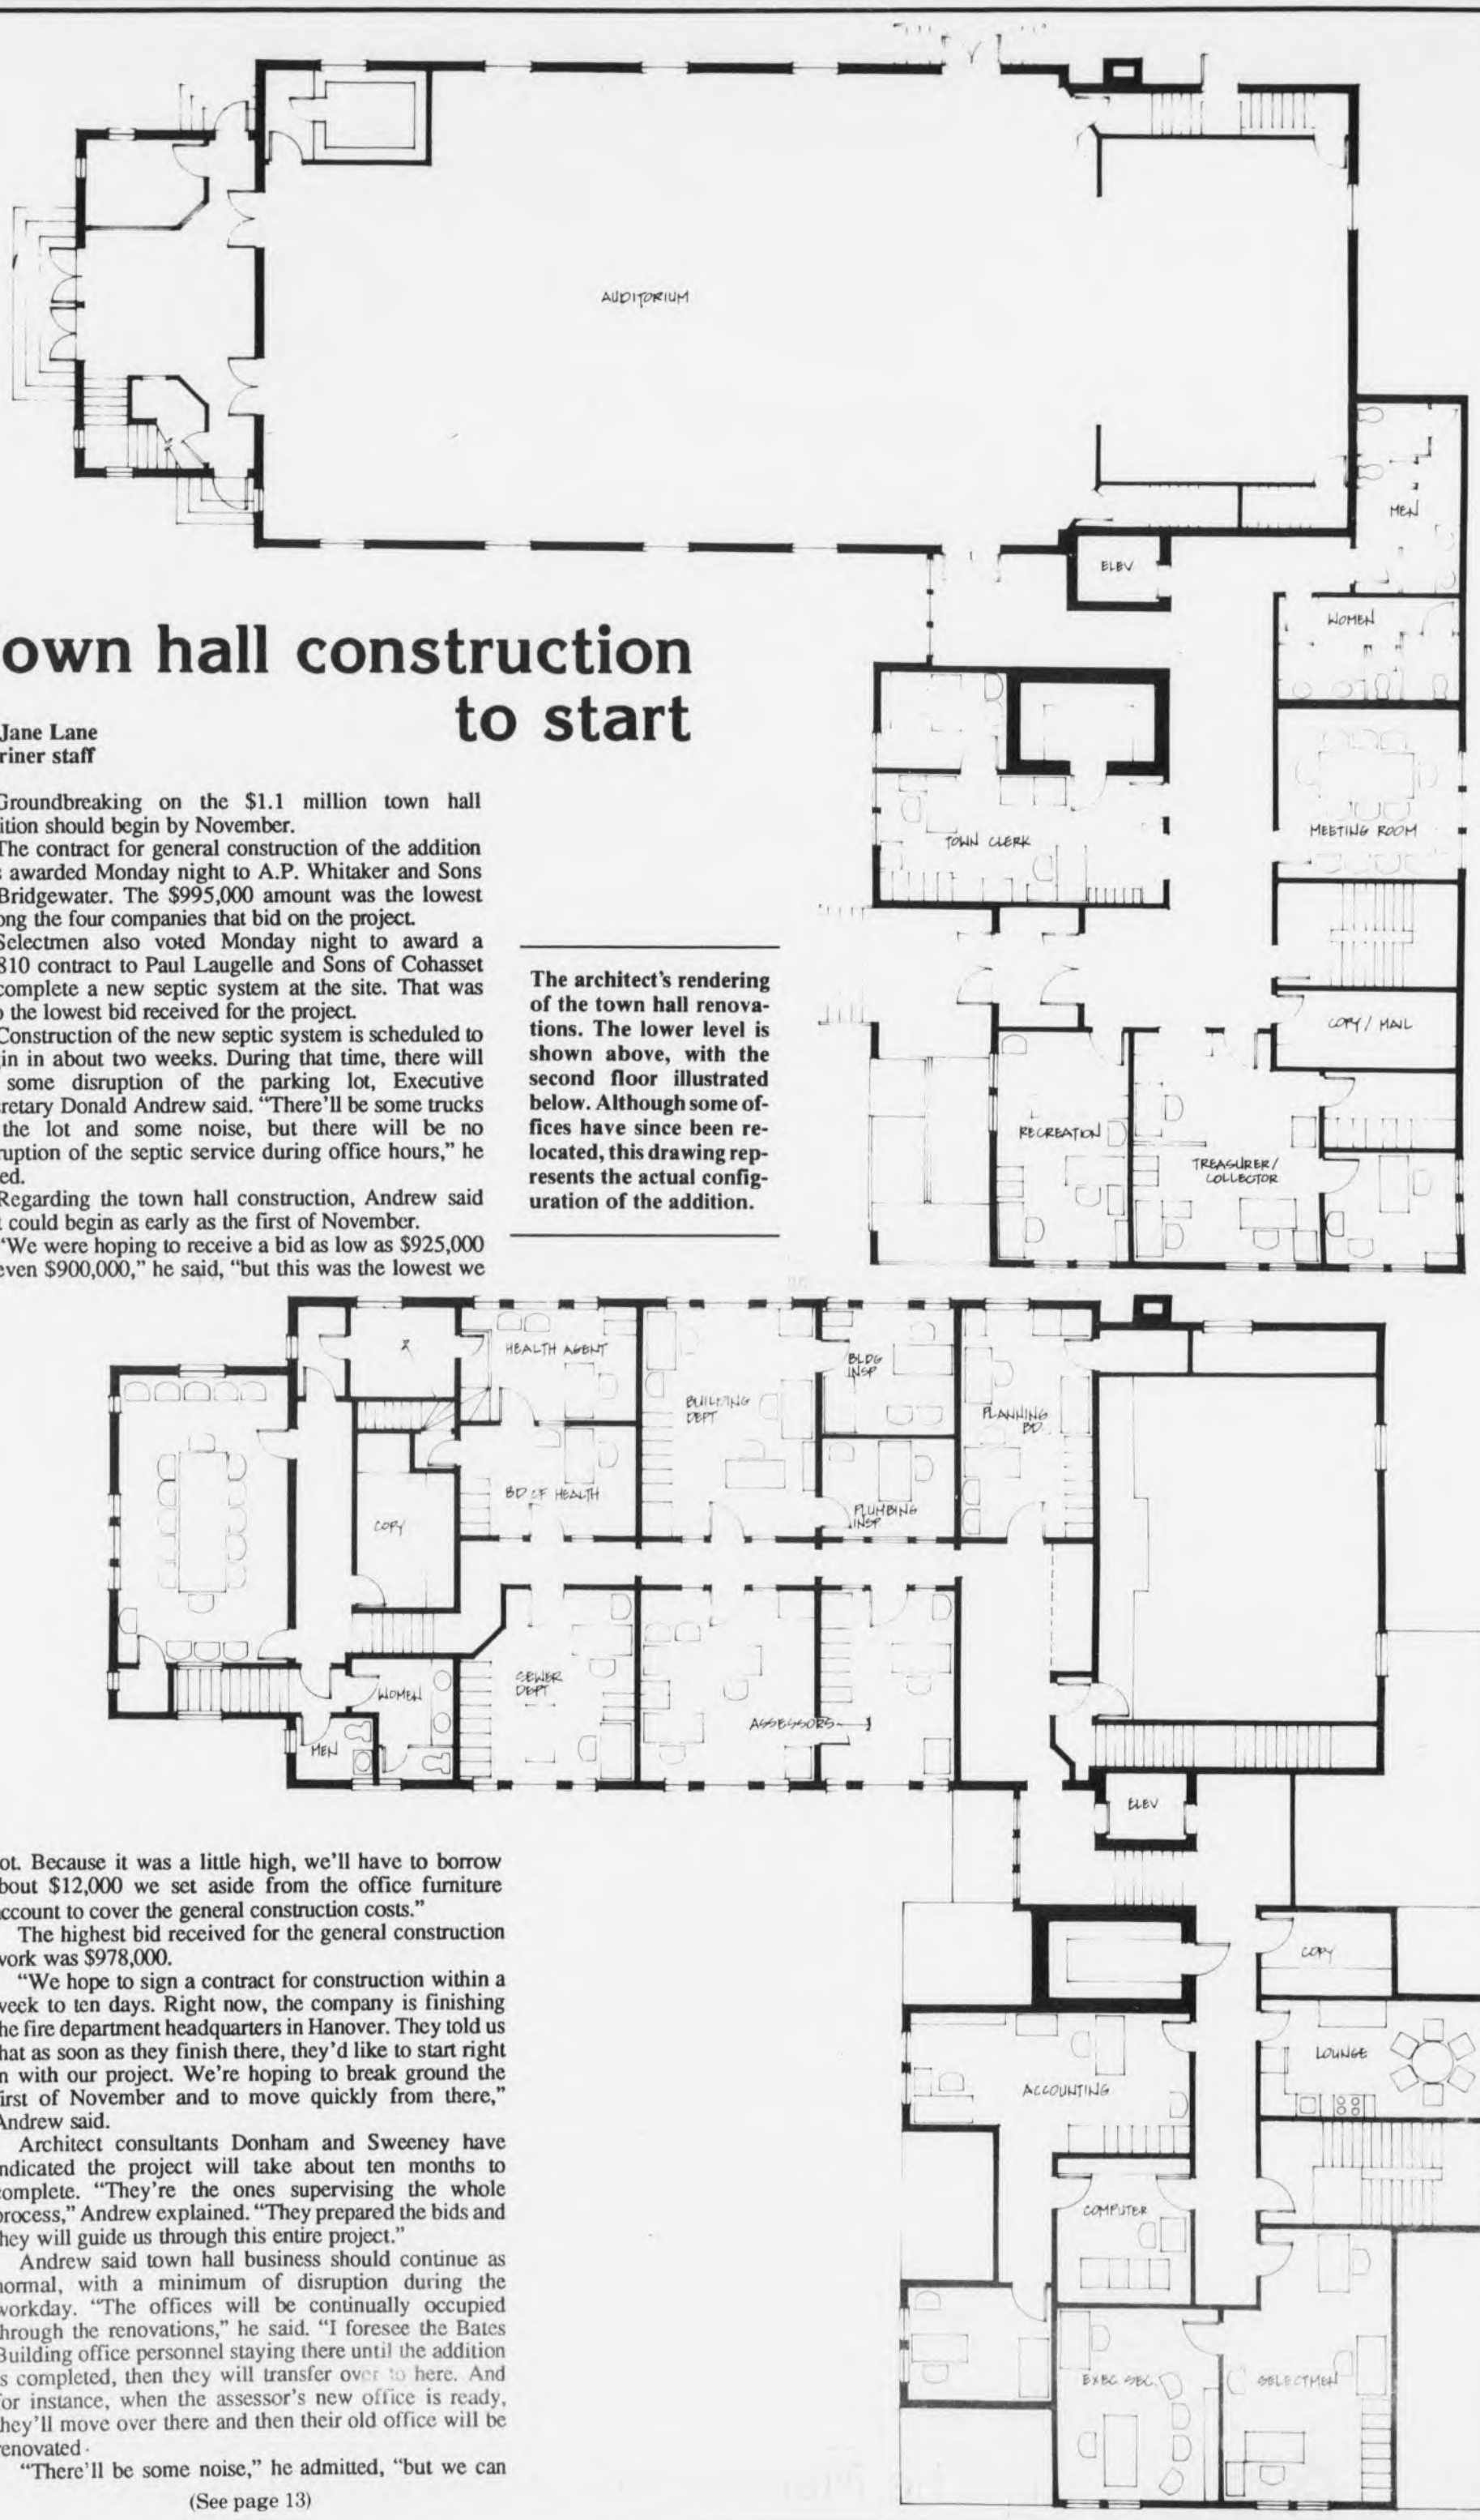
Selectmen also voted Monday night to award a $9,810 contract to Paul Laugelle and Sons of Cohasset to complete a new septic system at the site. That was also the lowest bid received for the project.

Construction of the new septic system is scheduled to begin in about two weeks. During that time, there will be some disruption of the parking lot, Executive Secretary Donald Andrew said. "There'll be some trucks in the lot and some noise, but there will be no disruption of the septic service during office hours," he stated.

Regarding the town hall construction, Andrew said that could begin as early as the first of November.

"We were hoping to receive a bid as low as $925,000 or even $900,000," he said, "but this was the lowest we got. Because it was a little high, we'll have to borrow about $12,000 we set aside from the office furniture account to cover the general construction costs."

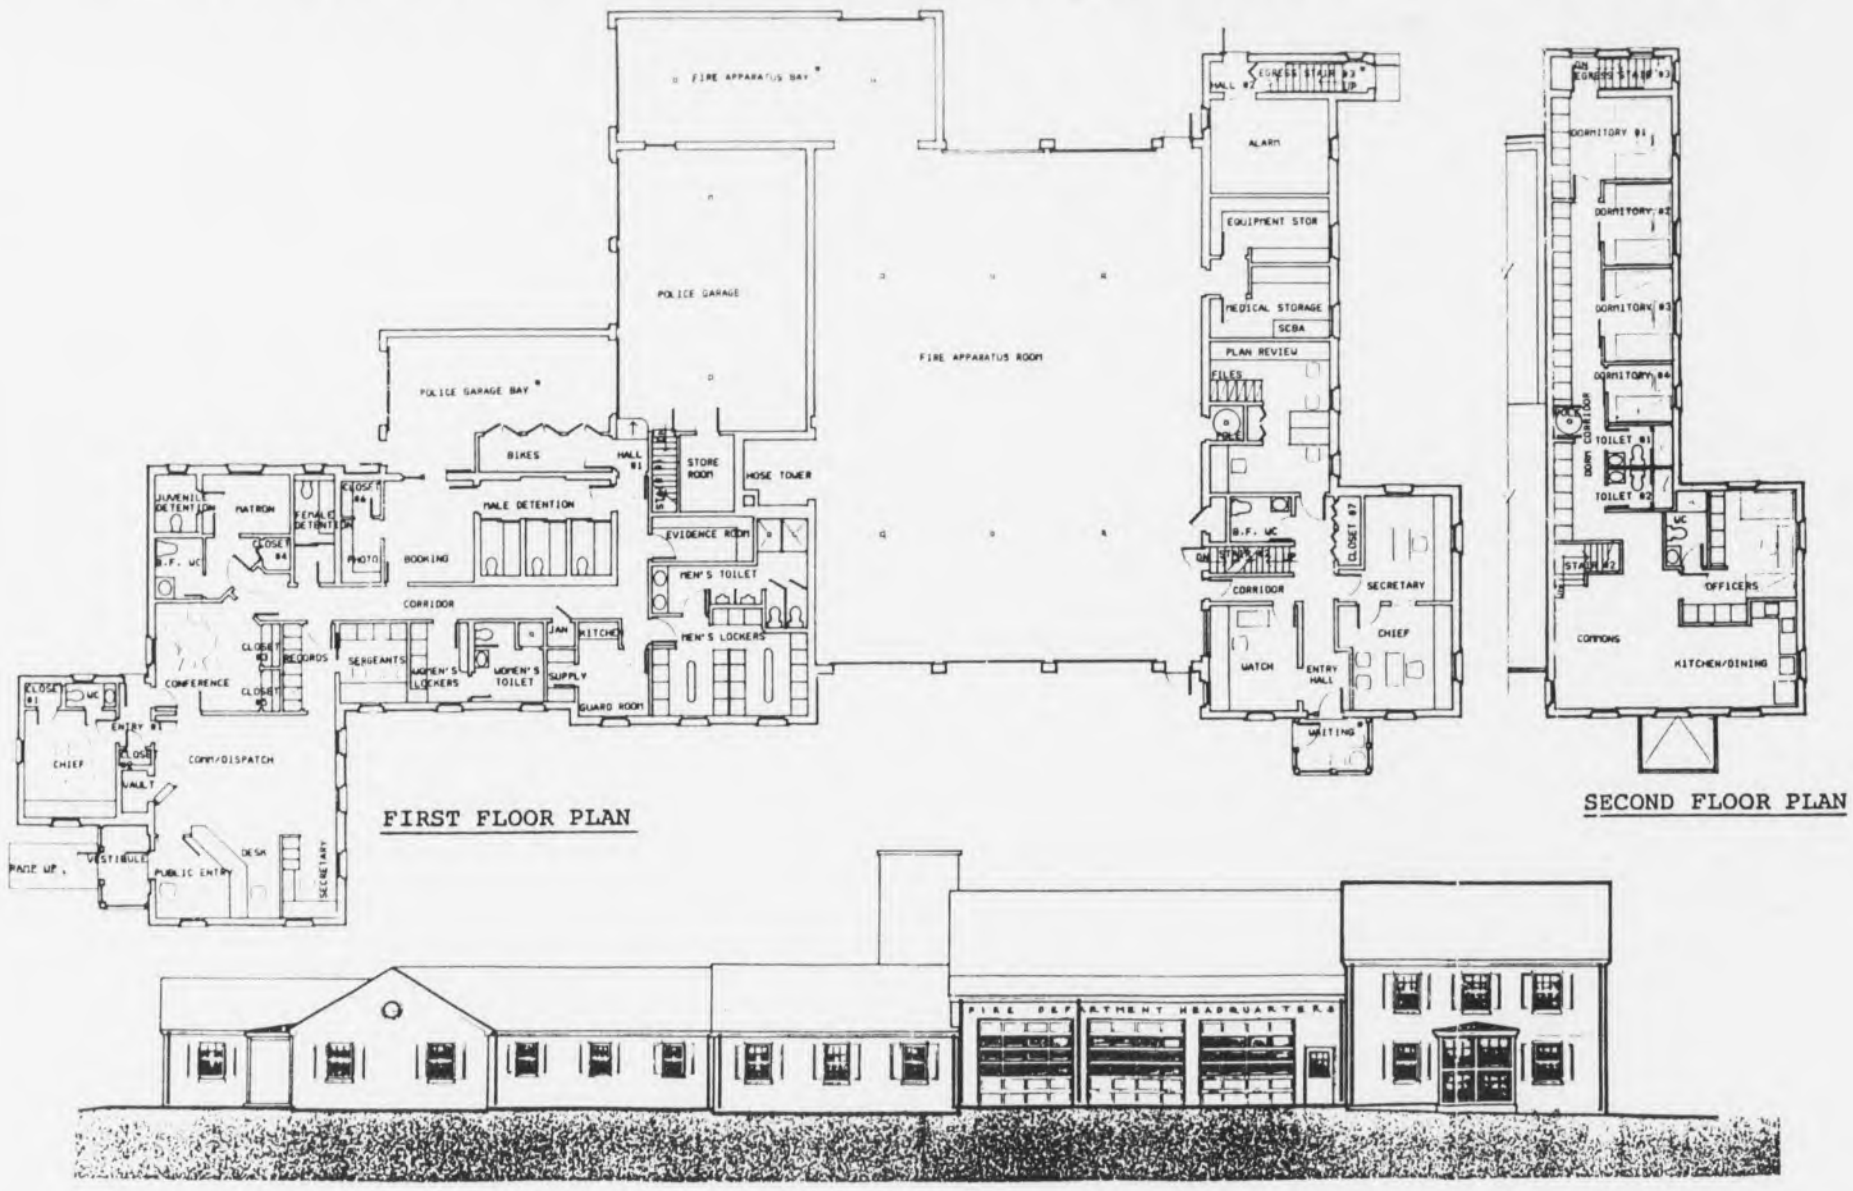
The highest bid received for the general construction work was $978,000.



"We hope to sign a contract for construction within a week to ten days. Right now, the company is finishing the fire department headquarters in Hanover. They told us that as soon as they finish there, they'd like to start right in with our project. We're hoping to break ground the first of November and to move quickly from there," Andrew said.

Architect consultants Donham and Sweeney have indicated the project will take about ten months to complete. "They're the ones supervising the whole process," Andrew explained. "They prepared the bids and they will guide us through this entire project."

Andrew said town hall business should continue as normal, with a minimum of disruption during the workday. "The offices will be continually occupied through the renovations," he said. "I foresee the Bates Building office personnel staying there until the addition is completed, then they will transfer over to here. And for instance, when the assessor's new office is ready, they'll move over there and then their old office will be renovated.



"There'll be some noise," he admitted, "but we can

Board. The Planning Board has since insisted on changes to the proposed agreement that would make it more difficult for Cohasset to develop low-income family housing or to implement zoning changes that promote affordable housing. The agreement now proposed by the Planning Board is completely unacceptable to EOCD.

More than five years have elapsed since EOCD first expressed concern to town officials about the lack of low and moderate-income housing opportunity in Cohasset. In that time, no commitments made by the Town to EOCD have been fulfilled in a timely or acceptable manner. No other significant actions have been fully supported by Town officials to address Cohasset's housing needs. For these reasons, and those outlined in my May 15, 1987 letter to the Selectmen, EOCD has determined that the Town of Cohasset is "unreasonably restrictive" of low and moderate income housing pursuant to Executive Order 215.

This determination will be withdrawn when the Town executes an acceptable new agreement with EOCD or upon a showing by the Town that it has made significant efforts to redirect its policies toward the development of affordable housing. In the interim, I have notified the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering that Cohasset's proposed $2.6 million sewer project is now ineligible for state Collection System Construction Grant funds. EOCD has also directed all state agencies to withhold discretionary grants from the Town until this determination has been withdrawn.

We regret the necessity of taking this action, particularly because of the good faith efforts demonstrated by the Cohasset Board of Selectmen, Executive Secretary and Housing Authority since our meeting in June. Your support for a new Memorandum of Agreement, a housing site inventory, and an application to EOCD earlier this month for family housing development funds through Chapter 705 have been significant. However the position taken by the Cohasset Planning Board, which would play a key role in any future housing initiatives in Cohasset, has given EOCD no choice but to make an adverse determination.

If you have any questions regarding the Town's status pursuant to Executive Order 215, please contact Christine Pappas of my staff at 727-7824.

work while construction continues."

Andrew explained, "I don't believe the contract will run over - it can't. That's the amount that was awarded. If eventually there is a change of order, which I hope there isn't, then maybe we could swap something off. The only thing that could possibly make this project overrun the contract amount is if they found structural damage in the old building. That's a legitimate cost overrun. But unless it's absolutely necessary, we will not exceed the contract amount.

"It's not like we're going to gold plate the bannisters or something like that," he added.

Schools to begin AIDS course at junior high

By Jane Lane
Mariner staff

Human sexuality will be taught in the public schools this year, beginning in the sixth grade.

The school committee supports a revised health education plan which will integrate reproductive anatomy and physiology into the sixth grade curriculum.

In addition, the committee supports a recommendation from the Community Health Education Advisory Committee to begin formal instruction in AIDS education and prevention in the junior high school.

Health education coordinator Michael Gill met with the community advisory committee last month to discuss state guidelines for incorporating AIDS education into the public school system. The state has suggested that all ninth to twelfth grade students be educated about AIDS.

According to Gill, the anatomy and physiology unit will serve as a precursor to the junior high school health education program. That is where the community advisory committee would like to see the initiation of formal instruction in AIDS education and prevention.

"In addition, because of the need to educate all Cohasset Junior/Senior High School students about AIDS each year, I recommended to the committee that some of the AIDS education curriculum be integrated into the Grade 10 biology classes and the Grade 10 social studies classes. I have received the go-ahead from the committee and the science and social studies departments," he wrote in a letter to the school committee.

Gill is also working to sponsor an AIDS education and awareness day at the high school "so that all students may be informed about this most serious subject during the present school year," he added.

The community advisory committee, which includes 31 residents, teachers, clergymen, and health professionals, works together with Gill to develop the health education curriculum. They will review the AIDS education plan throughout the year.

Supt. Stephen Hart explained Monday night to the school committee that the more formal AIDS curriculum will be incorporated into the biology and social studies classes and in elected programs for junior and senior students. An AIDS educational forum will be held sometime this year for all high school students, he noted.

"Working with the community advisory committee, I feel confident about this plan," he told the committee.

Supt. Hart also explained that several early release days this year will be devoted to training teachers in AIDS education. There will be expert speakers and information given to the teachers during these afternoon seminars, he said. "They will also have Mike's ongoing support," Supt. Hart stated.

Committee member Nancy Sandell noted that previously, reproductive anatomy was taught only to seniors. "I second the need to teach human sexuality in the schools. And this is a new, honest and thorough approach."

Educational seminar

Supt. Stephen Hart is proposing the school system sponsor an educational forum for teachers, students and the community. It would not be a formal seminar, he said, with a keynote speaker. "It will be an opportunity for the community to get together with the school committee to talk about issues that are affecting our school system," he stated.

School committee members enthusiastically endorsed the proposal, noting the tremendous level of energy that was tapped from the community during the exhaustive high school principal search two years ago.

"It was just that energy that we wanted to bring back," said Supt. Hart. "We want to encourage the public to participate in education again."

Public discussion and involvement in the system is critical in the long-term development of education in Cohasset, he added.

There will not be a set agenda, he explained. But the forum will include a variety of issues. Perhaps the participants will break up into smaller groups for discussion, the superintendent suggested.

"This is an exciting idea," member Barbara Bliss said. "I saw the enthusiasm of the people involved in the prinicpal interviews - the dialogue that was happening. It was a very exciting time. This will be an opportunity for that to continue."

Among the persons who will be invited to the forum will be the participants in the principal search, the PSO, parents, teachers and staff members. "Those outside the school community are most welcome to attend," Supt. Hart noted.

A date for the educational forum has not been set, but the superintendent said he hoped it could be scheduled in November.

The next scheduled meeting of the Cohasset School Committee is Monday, Oct.19 at 8 p.m. at the high school.

Reservations available for Glades

A limited number of reservations can still be accepted for the Cohasset Historical Society's Sunday, Oct. 18 tour of the historic Glades estate at Minot, North Scituate.

Since the maximum number of visitors must be limited to 200 for this unique and unusual tour, reservations must be handled on a first-come first-serve basis. Members and friends of the Historical Society are invited to join the tour by reserving a place as soon as is possible.

Reservations are $7.50 per person. To place reservations, please send check to: Cohasset Historical Society, 14 Summer St., Cohasset, MA 02025. The tour will be divided into three groups, the first at 1 p.m., the second at 2 p.m. and the third at 3 p.m. Please indicate which tour time you wish to attend. Parking for the tour will be at the Scituate Town parking lot on Bailey Causeway, Minot, where a bus will take visitors to the site of the tour.

Because of limited access to the Glades itself, the bus will provide all transportation to and from the location of the tour. The bus will run at 1 p.m., 2 p.m. and 3 p.m. for the three sections of the tour. Rain date for the tour event is Sunday, Oct. 25. Leading the tour will be Glades resident Robert Thorndike, a student of the fascinating history of the Glades. Light refreshments will be available. Since reservations must be limited to the first 200 persons, please send reservations as soon as possible.

Plan to join the Cohasset Historical Society on this most interesting special occasion. The Society's phone number is 383-6930 should additional inquiry be desired.

Cohasset pleased with league boundary change

A possible realignment of the South Shore League will be a bonus for Cohasset teams next year, according to Athletic Director Clark Chatterton.

Because there is currently a lack of schools in Cohasset's small school division, Chatterton said the inclusion of Randolph, Carver and Dennis-Yarmouth will ensure more equitable competition in the league.

There are currently two divisions within the South Shore League. But because some small schools do not sponsor teams in all sports, such as hockey or field hockey, Cohasset is forced to play competitors within the big school division.

"From 12 schools, Sandwich has no football, and we are mandated to a seven-game schedule, so we cross over and play three schools in the big school division," Chatterton explained. "We've been fighting this for years because for the past five years we've had to play Scituate and Whitman-Hanson to qualify for tournament competition."

With the inclusion of three more schools, Cohasset will be in a more equitable seven-school division. Plymouth-Carver will be included in the small school division, Chatterton predicted, and Hanover will be transferred from the big school to small school division.

The league realignments will not harm the South Shore League as much as the Old Colony League, he noted. "The OCL as we have known it is pretty well shot," he stated. "They have a wide range of schools, from Plymouth-Carver with about 3,000 students, to Hingham with about 1,100 students. That's a big spread. And now the two Quincy schools want to come in. If they do get in, it will affect that league drastically."

The director continued. "Most leagues have to realign now. Our enrollment figures are frightening. We're one of the smallest schools in the eastern part of the state. It's amazing that we've done so well.

"We're for the realignment of the South Shore League, and frankly, we're upset that Scituate is against it. I spearheaded the move to get Scituate into the league. I also wouldn't be surprised if Hingham decides to apply for admission into this league."

Chatterton figured that with a realignment, the big school division will include: (in order of enrollment) Dennis-Yarmouth; Duxbury, Randolph, Middleboro, Rockland, Scituate, and Sandwich. The small school division will include: Hanover; Norwell; East Bridgewater, Carver, Abington, Hull and Cohasset.

Cohasset's enrollment in grades 10 through 12 is 350 students.

A meeting is scheduled next week to decide on next year's schedule, which may include some new rivals for the championship Cohasset teams.

Girls split the week with soccer and field hockey

By Jennifer Plante
Mariner correspondent

Last Friday in Silver Lake, the girl's varsity soccer team defeated their opponent by a score of 2-1.

Even though the team felt this was a very tough game, they stayed together until the end and came out on top. Goals were scored by Juniors Katie Lord and Katie Murphy.

Because of Silver Lake's penatrating offense, the ball remained in their possession for a good part of the game. However, it wasn't until the second half that they managed to score their only goal.

The reason was Cohasset's strong defensive players who had an excellent game.SeniorsDebbie Dormer and Vicki Kelley along with Junior Cindi Dormer and Freshman Anna Samdell held the opposing team back from goal territory. Junior goalkeeper, Nancy Riley, kept the net clean, making numerous saves throughout the second half.

Senior forwards Jen Coley and Liz O'Leary played the ball well offensively for Cohasset. This week the Skippers will travel to Whitman-Hanson, a game they feel will be one of their toughest of the season. We wish you the best of luck!

Field Hockey

Last week, the Field Hockey team travelled to Sandwich for a game that was scheduled for Thursday, but postponed because of the weather conditions until Friday.

Even though they were without their star-player, Cindi Spooner, who re-injured her knee in Thursday's game and were defeated by a score of 2-0, everyone felt the game was evenly played.

It was only in the first fifteen minutes that Sandwich had a chance to score. After that, the defense of Junior Sarah Corbett and Seniors Coleby Mantz, Debbie Hartley, Heather St. Onge, and Julie Bowdon pulled through for Cohasset, keeping the ball from the grasp of the other team.

"The girls marked well and played an exceptional game," remarked Coach Clare Brady. "I'm sure we'll win next time." Brady also felt that Sophomore goalkeeper, Candi Jones performed well.

Also, on Monday, the team hosted Norwell, a great team themselves, and won by a score of 2-0. During the first half of the game, coach Brady said that Candi Jone's play in net kept the Skippers in the game until Sara Bishop's goal from a centered pass by Kerri Cullinare. Julie Bowdoin also scored in the second half with an assist from Debbie Hartley. This week, Field Hockey will be hosted by Duxbury on Wednesday and face Hanover at home on Friday.

If you have a chance, come by and cheer them on.

Orientation for volunteers at the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell will be held Thursday, Oct. 8, at 9:30 a.m. The program is open to all who are interested in volunteering in a nature-oriented environment.

A GREAT WAY TO SERVE

CHS soccer continues to roll over opponents

By Peter Kasperowicz
Mariner correspondent

Six wins. One tie. That's how well Cohesset boys soccer is faring this year after seven games; they have not lost yet.

B.C. High most recently fell prey to Cohasset's seemingly unstoppable win streak, although it was close. Earlier this year, Cohasset lost to B.C. in a scrimmage by a score of 1-0. However, thanks to Jimmy Reidy, this time the score was reversed; Cohasset won 1-0.

The boys were obviously expecting a tough game after losing the scrimmage earlier, but they were also aware of the fact that both B.C. (a division 1 team) and Cohasset (a division 3 team) were undeafeated.

"They're really similar to us. They really have the ability to move the ball well, they're not just a kick and run team," senior Dave Shultz said afterwards.

Jim and Joel Reidy had an interesting game as well. While Joel, the goalie, ended the game with his fifth shut-out this season Jimmy was faced with an intriguing situation.

My cousin plays for B.C., and he had to cover me. It was good to beat them . . . he still likes me, though," Reidy said.

That Saturday afternoon win was the icing on the cake last week; they had already defeated East Bridgewater on Monday by a score of 7-1, and Hanover on Wednesday by a score of 3-0.

In a game in which Cohasset completely dominated, Ian Smart led the team to the East Bridgewater victory with an outstanding 3 goals. Dave Shultz was close behind with two, and Jimmy Reidy and Jay Marsac scored once each.

Hanover proved to be more challenging, especially with Cohasset on a wet Hanover field. The first half ended at 0-0, but Cohasset made up for that in the second half. Jimmy (is he having a great season or what?) Reidy scored twice, and Kostos Roukanakis scored once with a shot hit so hard it almost broke the goalies fingers as he tried to save it.

Senior John Linsley noted the importance of scoring first in close games like these.

"What usually happens is that, if we can score first, the other team will tend to let up a little, and then scoring becomes easier and easier," he observed.

Whatever the case, the team is eager to keep the streak alive as they face Rockland at home on the 14th, and Middlebury away on the 16th.

History buffs treated to Franklin's wisdom

By David Johnson
Mariner staff

"I don't believe Mr. (John) Adams ever enjoyed himself," Benjamin Franklin told the 71st annual meeting of the Scituate Historical Society at the Little Red School House Oct. 3.

Although he was scheduled to discuss his role in forming the U.S. Constitution, Franklin spent much of his time answering questions about his social life while ambassador to the court of Louis XVI of France.

"You've been talking Adams," Franklin said to one woman. "I did indeed have a good time in Paris." He said that he had been sick during his ambassadorship and would have died had he actually done everything rumored.

Played by Arlington history buff, William Meikle, Franklin said that when he and John Adams were sent to Paris to raise money for the American Revolution from King Louis, the "Puritan" asked directly for aid and raised five million French livres. While Franklin "told a story here, a joke there," raising 29 million livres.

"When I was in Paris, I was absolutely adored," he boasted.

Heavy-set and balding with long white hair about the collar, Franklin wore a blue-green jacket, vest and breeches, white stockings and black shoes with gold buckles. Although he could only talk about things that happened up until the "this day, Oct. 3, 1787," he captivated the 50 people present for more than an hour.

Much of the discussion involved two subjects Franklin said he would avoid: death and politics.

"Politics is to an old fellow what gossip is to an old woman. We talk about those things we can no longer do," he quipped.

He praised James Madison for "the way he manipulated the agenda," at the Constitutional Convention, but said they weren't friends because, "We are more than 50 years separate. I'm old goods."

When asked by one of the several school children present what the Constitutional Convention was like, Franklin said, "It was blessed awful. I argued with everyone, who argued with everyone else. The Constitutional Convention cobbled, compromised and coppered something. That pitiful something is our Constitution. Almost nothing I wanted to see is in the Constitution. The Constitution is a recipe for living, it's not carved in stone.

Despite its limitations, the U.S. Constitution is "the best in the civilized world. Only the savages did it better."

Franklin explained that the Iroquois nation had an unwritten code of law, in use for 600 years. Iroquois law recognized women as legal entities, with the right to become a sachem or chief, he claimed.

He also reminded the audience that their early colonial ancestors, "had been kept alive by the good grace of the bloody savage heathen Indian."

It was the French and English who taught the Indians how to scalp, so the number of dead in the French and Indian War could be counted, he said.

However, Dr. Harald Johnson of First Parish Road said later that the Iroquois were not peaceful, since they broke a peace treaty and massacred the Huron Indians.

In response to a question from Anne Torrey, Franklin described his famous experiment with the key and the kite, which helped prove that lightning and electricity were the same thing. He said 32 other men had tried a similar experiment the same year he did, 1752, but that nine of the others were electrocuted.

"We must take some risk," the 81-year-old statesman said.

When Mary Quessenberry of Buttonwood Lane asked Franklin what he thought of open town meeting, the old sage said, "The New England town meeting is

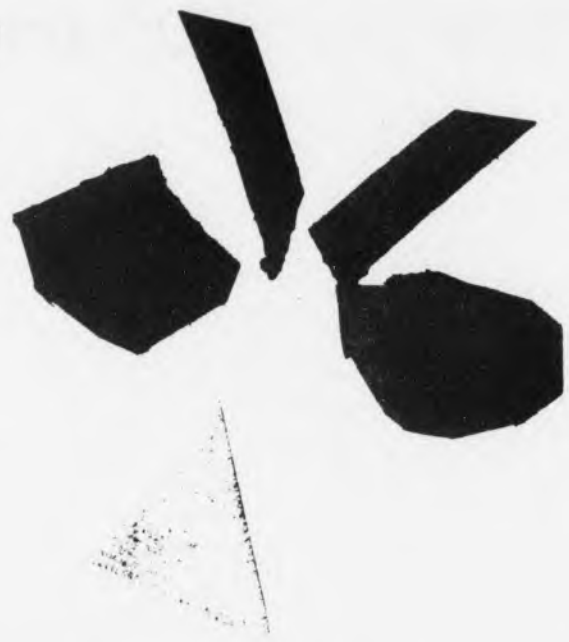
Wonderfully wicked witch stories

This month the Joseph Osgood Resource Room students have been writing ghost stories. The computer printed our ideas, but we created our ghosts.Come and see our ghost stories floating next to the Resource Room.



Once upon a time, there lived a ghost in a cave. He had a sister, brother, mom, and dad. When he got older, he kept being a badder and badder ghost. He was such a bad ghost that he lived with all the bad ghosts. He scared the witches away from the town. The people were happy, and his sister and mother. They gave him an ice cream cake. He had friends Ted and Collette. Ted and Collette had a brother and sister. They watched the moon rise to the stars. They bought a pumpkin and put lights inside. They went out trick and treating. It took 5 hours to scare all the witches away. Then the witches were gone and everyone was happy.

Melissa, Grade 2

One scary night, a ghost came. He found another ghost. They tried to scare each other away. The second ghost left. The first ghost went in his haunted house. He found a witch in his house. He scared the witch away. He went to his window and saw the moon shine. He wanted to buy a pumpkin. He put his pumkin on his front doorstep, so everyone could see it while they were trick and treating. He wanted to go trick and treating too. He asked his friends if they wanted to go with him. His friends went with him and they had a good time.

Kim, Grade 1

One scary night I came out and spooked people away. I went "BOO!", and the moon went down. I scared it. I went home and cut a pumpkin open. I cut eyes, and a nose, and a mouth with a tongue sticking out. I put it outside. I cut the top open and put a candle in it. Then, I put the top back on. Then, I went to bed.

Tim, Grade 1

The ghost came down to Earth and went into someone's house. They woke everyone up and threw a lightbulb out the window. Then all the other ghosts and witches came and broke other windows. The big witch came down to Earth and put a spell on everyone. The kids snuck up on the big witch, tied her up, and threw her in the woods. The kids threw an apple at the ghost's head and threw them in the woods. The kids saved the world.

Keith, Grade 2

One scary night a ghost came on Halloween. A ghost sneaked under the door. He wrote a story to the pumpkin. After that, he sneaked downstairs and found a candle. Then, he played with the computer downstairs. He went trick and treating. He went to the dragon and got 10 pumpkins. He put them in the house and shut off the light. They looked like ghosts. He sneaked under the table. Somebody came downstairs. He went in the kitchen, and the brother said, "There are ghosts in the house." He heard a noise outside, and he went outside to the Pumpkin House. He got a small pumpkin. He went in the witch's house and the witch heard, "BOO!" A bag popped out. He picked the candy out and put it in his pocket. He got a broom and went up in the sky. He saw a witch's hat. He dropped to the floor and the hat broke. The witch laughed. He put the candy in the witch's hat. The witch ate it, it was chocolate cake, 2 cookies, 12 cakes and 100 candies. Then, they went to bed.

Town faces big project . . .

Associates under the committees guidance. The existing building is 25 years old.

"About half of the money is going towards deffered repairs," said Sullivan.

The buildings face lift will include all new mechanical and lighting systems and major electrical improvements. 3000 square feet of space will be added to the building.

Some of the other features that appear in the plans for the fire department include new male and female dormitories and showers, improved office layouts and organization, an improved fire chief office, climate control, general modernization and barrier free access to public areas.

The plan for the police station includes appropriate barrier free access to public areas, additional booking space, additional record storage, a garage bay, a sargents room, bicycle and evidence storage, general modernization, a further separation of prisoner and public circulation and modern lockers and showers for male and female officers.

"The actual appearence of the building is not going to change that much," said Sullivan.

The plans state that the reasons for the design configuration of the renovation is to follow existing walls and reuse existing offices. Also this will limit demolition and structural changes.

The report by Putnam and Associates states that the costs reflect the fact that much of the work consists of small complex additions. Also the work will have to be done under the Chapter 149 public bidding statute which adds significantly to costs.

The combine schedule for complete renovations will be compoleted in 19 months. Construction will take place during only seven of the months. Obviously the stations will have to stay open during construction. Planners have concluded that at some point officers will have to be housed in on-site trailers for at least brief periods during the construction.

The Committee has estimated that construction of a complete new facility would cost twice the price of the recommended project not including site aquistion and development.

The major pysical addition will be a second floor. This will have four dormitory rooms, two bathrooms, a kitchen, a common area, offices and yes it will have a sliding pole.

"There is definately a need for this facility," said Robert Stansell chairmen of the police fire committee.

"The building is twenty-five years old, it hasn't been ignored but it needs upgrading," said Stansell who pointed out that close to fourty percent of the money was for maintenance.

"This project will improve the efficiency with which the departments operate," continued Stansell.

The fire deprartment has taken over the task of reviewing plans for prospective structures. Presently there is,"limited space for examining plans," according to Stansell.

"There are a few areas where the departments could have shared space," said Stansell, "but budget considerations didn't quite allow for this. We didn't feel that the town could afford to build a room just for wieght training, the budget being what it is."

"I think that this is a necessarty thing," continued Stansell. "I think that a common misconception is that we are providing our departments with something that other towns don't have. Many things that were requested by the departments were cut out. It is actually very close to the minimum standards. Based on what the selectmen asked for we have come up with the best plans possible."

The fate of the police/fire station renovations is now up to the voters.

Conservation withdraws support from article on the matter in order to review their recommendation for road construction from Rte. 3A. In the meantime, the commission will be drafting a letter to the planning board stating their reconsideration of the proposed access.

At their meeting Monday night, school committee members refused to withdraw an article from the special town meeting warrant, despite requests from the Evergreen Lane abuttors.

The article will ask the town to consider the release of school-managed property to the town for the purpose of swapping it for an equal piece of land off Rte.3A.

Developer Ferrini asked the committee to swap a 40-feet by 160-feet parcel of school-owned land so that he can build an access from three homes he is building along Rte. 3A onto Evergreen Lane. In exchange, he will give the town an equal piece of land adjacent to the 24 acres the committee currently manages behind the Deer Hill School.

Twenty Evergreen Lane residents and other abuttors to the Ferrini project attended Monday night's meeting. They asked the committee to withdraw the article, saying there had not been sufficient time to discuss the issue. The committee declined, noting that they inserted the article at the request of the planning board and conservation commission.

"We may have more reservations about this article than you," member Barbara Bliss noted. "But we felt that two town boards had asked us to do this. We felt as a school committee we were obligated to do this. The environmental issues should have been discussed by the planning board and the conservation commission."

The school committee agreed that the environmental concerns regarding this warrant article do not belong under their jurisdiction. They were merely expediting the placement of the warrant article, at the request of the other town boards, they stated.

The abuttors objected to the Ferrini plan, noting that the access will be encroaching on protected wetlands.

"We have a full plate of academic issues to discuss," Chairman Joseph Nedrow stated. "The issue of whether this land is in the wetlands is not within our pervue. We were merely expediting the legislative process at the request of other town boards."

Monday night's meeting got off to a shaky start with a disagreement between Nedrow and Old Pasture Road resident, Jeff Waal.

Waal and his wife, Ellie, wrote a letter to the committee last month, criticizing the members for failing to fully discuss the matter. Waal objected to the committee's discussion of the issue during an afternoon committee meeting Sept. 7, which he said could not be attended by many concerned residents. In his letter he stated, "the school committee should not be coerced into making hasty decisions to be on time for town meeting warrants."

Nedrow objected to Waal's accusations, and asked for an apology to the committee.

Waal refused, saying the committee had been asked to postpone discussion of the matter during the afternoon meeting. He said everyone concerned about the issue works during the day and could not attend that session.

Nedrow said that afternoon meeting was scheduled following the annual teacher's luncheon, and that fact that the Evergreen Lane issue was later included on the agenda was coincidental. He said the committee has deferred its opinion on the article until they receive a recommendation from the conservation commission and planning board.

Evergreen Lane resident Peter Pacetti said the residents have tried to address the issue with the conservation commission, but have not talked with the planning board. "We just felt that until this was discussed, it shouldn't be on the warrant," he stated. "I would be happy if you would withdraw the article off the warrant and I ask you for a proper discussion."

Committee member Diana Kornet explained that the article reads "to see whether the town" will approve the land transfer. "This is open to debate. You haven't been wronged," she said. Both she and Nedrow answered that the article will not be withdrawn, unless otherwise directed by the conservation commission and planning board.

Conservation Commission Chairman Merle Brown attended the committee's meeting. No representative of the planning board was there, a fact that angered member Barbara Bliss.

Brown said the commission requested the school-sponsored article, noting that the contractor is under time constraints to develop the land. Ferrini's plan to develop the land has been approved by the necessary boards, he explained, without access through Evergreen Lane. The suggestion to use the narrow, seldom-traveled road for access rather than busy Rte. 3A was made by the planning board.

Waal asked the town officials, "what's so special that this has to go before special town meeting? It is not of an emergency nature." He asked that the article be withdrawn, and again the committee declined.

"If the boards had second thoughts and recommended that you withdraw the article, would you?" he inquired.

"Yes," Kornet answered.

"I think we were given a can of worms," Bliss added.

Chairman Nedrow explained to the gathered residents, "There are certain timelines to get things in the town meeting warrant. So there is a lot of time for discussions now. Town meeting is the proper forum for debate.

Bliss added, "We felt at the time that the articles must be submitted by a certain time so citizens can react to their warrant. We gave a lot of forewarning to this issue. We felt we would submit it at the request of the planning board and conservation commission. As citizens, we might vote differently. But we have no right to be a roadblock even though we might feel differently about the issue. We have never said we feel the land should be transferred."

INDIAN SUMMER PICNIC

The Parish Picnic that was drowned by a "nor-easter" will be held on Sunday after the 10 a.m. service Oct. 11 at Fran Wakeman's, 257 Atlantic Avenue. We expect a lovely "indian summer" afternoon, so bring tennis rackets and lawn chairs. Food and beverages will be provided and will be served at 12:30 p.m. You may wear picnic attire to church that day.

PICTORIAL DIRECTORY

In less than three years St. Stephen's has grown by a third. A helpful way to acquaint us with each other (in addition to the fellowship time, brunches, and other activities) is by creating a pictorial directory which will offer not only names and addresses but also pictures of all our families and individuals. This directory is a service of The Episcopalian newspaper and is offered at no cost to the parish. Parishioners may wish (but are under no obligation) to purchase photographs which will be available for Christmas giving. Photographs used in the directory are subject to parishioners' approval and a complimentary 10 X 13 color portrait is given.

Photography sessions will be held on Saturday, Nov. 7 beginning at 10 a.m. and will continue on Sunday, Nov. 8. Gertrude Hooper will be scheduling appointments now through Nov. 7, at a table in Walton Rodgers Hall after Sunday worship. Don't miss this opportunity to visualize our whole parish as a family and to obtain family pictures should you wish.

MUSIC PROGRAM FOR CHILDREN

Beginning Monday, Oct. 19, Mrs. Ann Whiteley, a primary and junior music specialist, will begin music programs for children ages 4 through first grade at 3:15 p.m. and for children second grade and up at 3:45 p.m.

The programs will be one-half hour for the youngest group and forty-five minutes for the older children. Children will form youth choirs and will take part in various worship services. Prior musical training is not required, only an enjoyment of music.

Please call our church secretary, Carole Tierney, to register your children (383-1083).

RECTOR TO PREACH

The Rev. Clifford Cutler will preach the sermon for the Cathedral's radio broadcast on All Saints' Day, Nov. 1. A Sunday morning service from The Cathedral Church of St. Paul is broadcast over WCRB (102.5 FM) every Sunday at 8:30 a.m. The sermon is taped on the Tuesday prior to broadcast.

CARE FOR THE CAREGIVERS

Elizabeth Killian RN., M.S., C.S. will offer an informal presentation on "care for the care-givers" at St. Stephen's on Wednesday, Oct. 28 from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m.

Ms. Killian has had extensive professional nursing experience in a variety of settings. She holds a master's degree in psych-mental health from Boston College, and is the co-founder of Mental Health Care at Home, Inc., a psychiatric home care agency. Her current work with clients and families in the home environment affords her a holistic, down to earth perspective regarding the real problems that confront people.

HELP NEEDED WITH CHILDREN

All parents and others who are interested in ways to make the Fellowship Time more constructive for children are asked to meet with Cliff Cutler on Sunday, Oct. 18, in the Watermelon Room after the service and fellowship time on that day.

OUTREACH NOTES

The adult education committee has scheduled an evening on our companion diocese relationship with Zimbabwe for Wednesday, Oct. 21, at 7:30 p.m. Mrs. Jane Presler, who with her husband, The Rev. Titus Presler and their four children, recently returned from three years of ministry in Zimbabwe, will describe their experience. She will also present a slide show. Linked parishes on the south shore have been invited to come and share their experiences with their Zimbabwe companion parishes. All members of St. Stephen's are cordially invited to attend.

Jane will also preach the sermon at our Sunday service on Oct. 18.

VILLAGE FAIR NEWS

The Village Fair will be held Saturday, Dec. 5. We are in need of people to help in many areas.

St. Stephen's is in charge of the Plant Table and the Boutique area this year — both of which are large undertakings. We are looking in particular for a person to Chair the Plant Table — there are plenty of workers available, but there is a need for a chairperson. The Boutique table is being split into two areas this year — a furniture and painting boutique and the craft boutique. (More about this new feature below). We will need someone to coordinate the craft end of the Boutique Table. In addition to chairing two tables at the Fair, St. Stephen's has been asked to provide workers for the following areas: Children's Corner, Secret Room, Bargain Bazaar, Plants, Bake and Candy Table, Wreaths, Snack Bar, Clean-Up, Transportation.

Please call Donna Blain (383-1089) during the day or Sheila Wallingford (383-6897) in the evenings if you can help in any of these areas.

NEW BOUTIQUE TABLE

A new feature is being added and we think it should be quite successful. We are planning to sell framed artwork (paintings, prints, ink sketches, etc.) and refinished furniture. If you can donate some artwork or some small pieces of furniture to be refinished, please let Donna Blain or Sheila Wallingford know. We will need people to refinish the furniture.
